Zoning plan draws fire at info session

TWIN FALLS — Area businessmen offered several suggestions and objections concerning municipal zoning regulations at a public information meeting Thursday.

More than 60 persons attended the information session, sponsored by the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce, to hear city and business representatives discuss the pros, cons and middle ground of city planning and zoning provisions and a proposed street plan.

Twin Falls City Manager Tom Courtney said the proposed municipal zoning ordinance before the City Council generally is more flexible than the existing ordinance. Courtney emphasized the ordinance was criticized by local representatives of the real estate and construction businesses, and about 95 percent of revisions sought by those persons are in the zoning document scheduled for council action.

However, Gary Wignall, a businessman and Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission member, said the proposed ordinance nonetheless spells difficulty for the city's business community.

In short, Wignall said, he is "sick and tired of government officials, both elected and appointed, spending my money on their likes and dislikes."

The meeting also included distribution of a survey concerning the public's desire for a Twin Falls arterial system.

The questionnaire, offered by Twin Falls Highway District Commissioner Lloyd Shewmaker, is the same one circulated in 1973 when an arterial transportation plan was proposed. It relates to a Carriage Lane which residents of the city recently argued would be a prime residential area.

Shewmaker said the plan is the misconception that Carriage Lane arterial would draw traffic to the area. He said it is illogical to believe freight trucks would leave I-85, cross the Perrine Bridge to travel along Carriage Lane and then proceed on Kimberly Road.

More accurately, he said, the arterial would enhance the flow of traffic headed from one part of Twin Falls to another.

In discussing the existing and proposed zoning regulations, Courtney conceded some create both expense and inconvenience for owners of businesses. But regulations such as those requiring that business owners construct curbs, gutters, sidewalks and arterial approaches in connection with building projects reflect the council's obligation to protect public investment and enhance public safety, the city manager said.

Signage improvements might appear unnecessary when buildings are constructed in virtually undeveloped areas, Courtney said, but they're required in anticipation of the area's eventual development and the related influx of traffic. Without the improvements, traffic can erode the edge of a street, raising city maintenance expenses substantially. In some instances, he said, the city will allow postponement of such improvements.

Surplus estimate

State finance officials predict $9 million at most

BOISE (UPI) — Officials in the Idaho Financial Management Division gave a less optimistic forecast Thursday for a fiscal year 1981 budget surplus.

The said it's not likely to exceed $9 million.

A division official said earlier this week revenue could total $593.5 million for a $13.5 million general fund surplus, but economist Richard Slaughter said Thursday the more realistic figure was $39 million, which would represent about a $9-million surplus.

Slaughter also said he would not be surprised if the figure turned out to be $387 million, a $7-million surplus.

Division officials said several factors still could affect the final revenue total, collections by the state Tax Commission being most important. Also important is how much money budgeted for fiscal year 1981 will not be spent. Slaughter said that figure is likely to be about $1 million.

Other revenue experts, including state Tax Commission Chairman Jenkin Palmer and Associated Taxpayers of Idaho Director Russell Westenberg, have predicted the surplus could amount to $15 million or more.

The state Board of Examiners will huddle Monday to review revenue figures and decide whether to rescind all or part of the 3.85 percent state budget reduction it imposed last year during the recession.

Some state agencies have requested the reduction be lifted, while some legislators would like the excess money to be used as tax relief and Gov. John Evans would favor distributing it to the school districts.

White House admits latest tax plan will cost poor more

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Democrats sharply attacked President Reagan's tax cut proposal Thursday.

They charged low-income workers would actually pay $42 more in taxes next year while some wealthy Americans would save more than $20,000.

An administration spokesman conceded the tax cut in its first year would have such a disproportionate effect. But he maintained all tax brackets would be reduced in the second and third years of the plan.

For the second consecutive day, Democrats on the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee questioned John Chabotian, assistant treasury secretary for tax policy, about the Reagan proposal. The panel's 12 Republicans were silent.

Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., announced the panel will begin drafting a tax cut bill next week for passage by August.

Democrats favor a two-year, 15 percent reduction with cuts aimed at workers earning between $20,000 and $50,000 a year. Reagan proposes a 33-month, 25 percent across-the-board cut in individual income tax rates.

The Democrats complained the across-the-board approach would be unfair to the poor, because they would still feel the effect of rising Social Security taxes.

On the average, workers earning between $5,000 and $10,000 a year would receive a $58 income tax cut in 1982 under the president's plan, said Rep. Donald Pease, D-Ohio. But when increased Social Security taxes are included, he estimated the net effect would be a $42 tax increase next year.

Conversely, he said, people in the $20,000 to $50,000 income range would receive a $406 tax cut on the average. And even with high Social Security taxes, they would save a net $103.

Those earning $200,000 or more would save a whopping $20,300 in taxes even after the Social Security increase was included, he said.

"I don't dispute (the figures)," Chabotian said. "We have a progressive income tax. And if you are going to cut taxes across the board, more of the cut will go to the bigger taxpayer."

But in the second and third years of the proposal, all income brackets would be reduced by more than enough to offset both the effects of inflation that push people into higher brackets and rising Social Security taxes.

Both Democrats and Republicans support accelerated depreciation schedules for business investments, but Democrats criticized the size of Reagan's business tax cuts.

Rep. James Shannon, D-Mass., questioned the part of the Reagan plan that would establish a new, faster schedule for business to write off investments.

Chabotian conceded that by 1985, if inflation slowed considerably, some businesses would pay no tax under the administration's plan and would have enough tax credit left over to offset taxes on future investments.

"I don't see at a time when we're cutting the budget and Social Security how we can have an effective (business) tax rate of less than zero," Shannon said. "I hope we can change that in markup."

Where's Dallas?

Search for suspected killer of F&G officers is still going on BOISE (UPI) — Claude Lafayette Dallas Jr. could be anywhere from Alaska to the East Coast.

He might even still be in the windswept Idaho-Nevada border area where he allegedly killed two state game wardens five months ago.

Despite the staggering chore of sweeping out false information coming from all sections of the country, authorities plan to pursue their search for Dallas as long as they have any leads.

The 30-year-old trapper from Paradise Junction, Nev., vanished soon after Idaho Fish and Game Department conservation officers Wilson "Conley" Elms and William Pogue were shot dead along the Owyhee River in Idaho's huge, sparsely populated Owyhee County Jan. 5.

The officers were investigating poaching violations. As a witness told it, authorities, Dallas got the drop on Elms and Pogue, killing them on the spot. It was the first time an on-duty Idaho game warden had been slain.

Dallas, a Virginia native, led a hermit-like existence in the border area. He is thought to be well educated in survival techniques and guerrilla tactics and is considered extremely dangerous.

Owyhee County Sheriff Tim Nettleton heads the investigation, and predicts he'll eventually track down Dallas, who is charged with first-degree murder by the county and unlawful flight to avoid prosecution by the FBI.

"It depends in who you're talking to about when we'll find him," Nettleton said. "I've got a lot of whiskey bet on it. It wouldn't surprise me if it took two years, or even longer."

If it was thought possible that Dallas may have fled to Canada, Alaska or another remote region to resume a life in the wilderness, Nettleton also said he can't rule out that Dallas has gone to a city.

He said it's unlikely the man left the country, and there's not much evidence to show he remained in the vast, rugged area where Idaho, Nevada and Oregon meet. But it's possible.

"It's anybody's guess where he's at," Nettleton said. "We are looking at several places."

"Right now, it's a matter of following up phone calls — the 'I've seen Claude Dallas' calls."

Three or four such reports are checked out in the average week, said Nettleton. With some reports, authorities have located men who looked like Dallas, but weren't him, the sheriff said. "These can take a full day of our time to check out. We've got them from virtually every state in the nation."

Nettleton said the large volume of reports was due to media stories on the Poir and Game wardens' killings and a massive manhunt for Dallas in the weeks immediately after the shooting. Attention also has been drawn to the case by "wanted" posters distributed by the Fish and Game Department and the FBI, showing grainy pictures of Dallas, with a beard and a ponytail, sunglasses and a cowboy hat with the brim turned down.

He was last seen north of Winnemucca, Nev., after allegedly disposing of Pogue's body, which has not been found. Elms' body was pulled out of the Owyhee River a short distance down stream from the shooting site, Dallas camp.

Nettleton said catching Dallas is "going to be a combination of a little luck and a lot of hard work."

Washington nuclear plants may cost Idaho

By RON ZELLAR
Times-News writer

BOISE — Financial tremors affecting construction of five nuclear power plants in Washington may have fallout for electricity ratepayers in Idaho.

"Moody's Investor Service," a Wall Street bond rating company, Thursday lowered by two notches its rating for two of the plants being built by the Washington Public Power Supply System, the construction arm of 23 public utilities in Washington and Oregon.

The rating reflects new fears the two plants may never be built. Robert Ferguson, WPPSS managing director, recommended two weeks ago that the system's board adopt a one-year moratorium on plants No. 4 and No. 5, which are 12 and 18 percent completed.

Three other nuclear plants are between 20 and 87 percent completed.

An investors' newsletter from New York states WPPSS financial troubles could affect the financial health of utilities throughout the region. Bonneville Power Administration is negotiating power exchange contracts with Northwest utilities, and is committed to purchasing electricity from the first three WPPSS plants.

Costs of the five nuclear plants have escalated from an estimate $4 billion when they were first approved to $24.3 billion. About $12 billion of the total is for projects No. 4 and No. 5.

"The ability of the market to continue to absorb this staggering amount of debt is certainly questionable," said a newsletter issued this week by Drew, Burnham, Lambert Inc., a New York investment firm.

Even if the plants are not built, there will be costs related to tearing them down and defending WPPSS against court suits from participants and equipment suppliers, the newsletter states.

2 killers flee Nevada pen

CARSON CITY, Nev. (UPI) — Authorities searched Thursday for two convicted killers who escaped in a guard's car from Nevada State Prison.

State Attorney General Richard Bryan demanded an immediate explanation by prison officials why the inmates who escaped were allowed outside the walls to wash cars.

The escaped killers, Walter Rogers, 44, and Richard Burch, 35, disappeared Wednesday morning along with a car belonging to one of the guards. Both men were serving life terms for murder and were considered dangerous.

"I am told by reliable authorities that a car in the parking lot was left unattended near the inmates, possibly with the keys in it," Bryan said.

"I have also been informed that the escape may not have been reported to authorities for an hour and a half after it was discovered the inmates were missing."

Bryan has criticized the prison in the past for lax security.

"It is totally incomprehensible to me how this could have happened. The maximum security prison houses some of the most dangerous inmates in this country."

He said the prison "is unfortunately located in a primarily residential area of this city with families and small children close by and prison officials have special responsibility to those families."

The maximum security unit with about 400 inmates has been the scene of six hostage taking incidents, two killings, a number of attempted murders and several escapes during the past nine months. At least three pistols have been smuggled in by inmates.

In further unrest at the prison, 18 inmates slashed their arms and legs to protest conditions and the warden was demoted in a top-level shakeup.

William Lattin, who was warden of a prison in Jean, Nev., took over Thursday as acting superintendent of the troubled facility, temporarily replacing Max Neuneker who was transferred to another prison along with two top aides.

Assistant prison director Steve Robinson said Lattin will "go by the basics," which includes pat-down searches of inmates and searches of cells.

The protest by the 18 inmates started Friday as they used razor blades and glass to inflict wounds on their calves and wrists. They are complaining about the food, medical treatment, dental care and visiting privileges.

Each evening the inmates either cut themselves anew or put out their old stitches, which are then treated the next day in the medical facility.

Quake kills 5,000

ANKARA, Turkey (UPI) — A powerful earthquake hit southeast Iran Thursday, burying 5,000 people in the rubble of collapsed buildings, Tehran Radio said.

Tehran University measured the quake in Kerman province, 470 miles southeast of Tehran, as having a force of 6.8 on the open-ended Richter scale, a reading indicating the quake was capable of causing widespread and severe damage, the radio said in a report monitored in Ankara.

Iranian Prime Minister Mohammed Ali Rajai said over the radio that although no exact casualty figures were available, as yet, "5,000 people lost their lives and much damage was caused."

He said it was such a large disaster "that it's impossible to compensate for it without public aid and the revolutionary sacrifice of you heroic people."

The radio also reported that more than 1,500 people were seriously injured in the quake and moved to hospitals.

A major relief operation was started and the radio said efforts were under way to pull out "bodies of the dead from under masses of rubble."

The earthquake, which occurred at 1:25 a.m. MDT was centered near the provincial capital of Kerman, about 500 miles southeast of Tehran.

A quake measuring 5.8 on the Richter scale occurred in the same general area Dec.-19, 1977, killing about 580 people and injuring 1,000 others.

Iran's last major earthquake killed 25,000 people in September 1978 in the northeastern part of the country.

High water cancels search

CHALLIS (UPI) — Swift-running, muddy "water" forced authorities Thursday to call off a search in the Salmon River for victims of a truck crash, Custer County Sheriff Gerald Hanson said.

Rescue units from Custer and Lemhi counties probed until noon a section of the river between Challis and Clayton, where the small pickup was found off state highway Wednesday morning.

Hanson said the search might be resumed when the river level drops.

He said the rain-swollen river was turbulent and muddy and made a search for a body extremely difficult.

Hanson said one man who may have been in the pickup has been listed as missing and his relatives have been notified, but the sheriff declined to give a name.

"We don't know how many teenagers were in there," Hanson said. "Until we can verify how many were in it, we're not going to give any names."

IRS seizes Billy's property

ATLANTA (UPI) — The Internal Revenue Service has seized all of Billy Carter's property in Plains and his home and 56 acres in Buena Vista because of his failure to pay back taxes, the Atlanta Constitution reported Thursday night.

However, the paper said, the IRS intends to allow a scheduled June 27 action of Carter's Plains property to proceed.

The sale is expected to raise enough money to pay off the $105,000 he owes the government.

The Constitution reported that while the IRS seized Carter's property last Friday, it does not actually own the real estate. The IRS reportedly made the move to protect its own interests after a promise by Carter in March that he would pay off the remainder of his tax debts within 90 days failed to materialize.

Oregon jail escapee arrested in Twin Falls

TWIN FALLS — A man accused of escaping from custody in Oregon was arrested in Twin Falls Thursday.

Jimmy D. Grandy, also known as Benjamin Grandy, was released from the Union County Jail in La Grande, Ore., on a half-day pass and failed to return, according to Sheriff Bob Price.

Price said a woman with whom Grandy had been traveling returned to Union County and told authorities Grandy could be found in Twin Falls.

Grandy, 40, had been arrested in Union County on an assault charge. Price said. Twin Falls Police arrested him on a charge of second-degree escape and are holding him in Twin Falls County Jail pending extradition proceedings.

State police payroll in jeopardy

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho Law Enforcement Director Keith Pearce said Thursday he will ask the state Board of Examiners for $350,000 to allow him to meet his agency's June 19 payroll.

Pearce said he would ask the board at its Monday meeting in Boise.

He said the Idaho Transportation Department's share of the state Motor Vehicle Account to cover payroll for the Idaho State Police, the Motor Vehicles Division and some department administrative personnel.

Normally, the Transportation Department receives two-thirds of the Motor Vehicle Account revenue, while Pearce's agency gets the rest.

Pearce said the transfer was needed because his agency would get its share of the fees from the counties, where they are collected, until after June 30. He said the $350,000 would be repaid before June

"What has happened is what we've been saying for a long time now...that anticipated revenues (for the account) were $11.2 million, while actual revenues are about $10.3 million," Pearce said.

The decline in revenue in vehicle registration and license fees are dropping because people are buying fewer new cars, which cost more to license and register, Pearce said.

provements until development renders them necessary.

Because of city regulations, said United Oil Co. President Wignall, he cannot afford to erect a canopy over his gas pumps on Kimberly Road.

Putting up the canopy would require he provide appropriate fire protection station, which in turn would render some of his pumps useless, thus eliminating 50 percent of his gas-pumping ability, Wignall said.

"Then I don't need the canopy because I can't afford to stay in business," he said.

He disagreed with the city officials' claim that approaches trim accidents by allowing people to complete their turns with greater speed.

"Wider streets and attentive drivers would reduce accidents," he said. Wignall also said he doesn't want high-speed traffic on his property as a result of drivers quickly turning onto it.

In addition, Wignall said a businessman can find scant relief in the city's willingness to defer improvements pending an area's growth and related traffic increase.

"A capital expense is an expense, no matter when you do it," and with spiraling costs, deferred can increase the burden, he said.

Other discussion topics Thursday included city sign regulations and landscaping requirements. Opponents of city regulations included Rex Lytle of Lytle Sign Co. and Jack Q. Miller of P and M Building Systems. Miller also is on the Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission. Their comments were preceded by Courtney's summary of the city's approach to landscaping and sign regulations.

"Needless to say, this is not going to be terribly popular with ratepayers," the letter remarks.

Idaho Power Co. is one of the utilities negotiating with BPA for exchange power under provisions of the Northwest Power Act. Congress approved the measure to guarantee Northwest electricity supplies and distribute the cost benefits from hydroelectric dams on the Columbia River.

James Bruce, board chairman of Idaho Power, said two factors in whether the company will join the regional power pool are the length of contract required, and "educated judgements" of how rapidly BPA power rates will increase.

At present, 80 percent of the power in the BPA region comes from hydroelectric sources and 20 percent from coal and nuclear plants. Idaho Power's supply averages 74 percent hydro and 26 percent thermal.

Conley Ward, one of three members on the Idaho Public Utilities Commission, said financial collapse of the final two WPPSS plants could have good and bad consequences.

"On the one hand, if they are not built, it eliminates the spectre of them being included in the cost pool," Ward said. "If it affects their ability to pay by downgrading bond ratings on the three remaining plants, that cuts the other way."

The Drexel, Burnham, Lambert newsletter said WPPSS Projects 1, 2 and 3 "are neither enhanced nor immunized from this latest turn of events."

Ward said he expects BPA power costs to continue their upward spiral in coming years. The agency has increased wholesale rates by more than 50 percent each of the past two years.

The commission will look closely at any contract BPA offers before allowing Idaho Power's participation, he said.

thundershowers. Highs near 80 today and near 70 Saturday. Lows near 50.

Synopsis:

After a sunny, cool Thursday, the rains should return today. Another disturbance developing along the northern California coast is expected to spread clouds and showers into western Idaho tonight with cooler air accompanying the change in weather.

The showers will begin decreasing today and evening and western sections of Idaho on Saturday, with mostly dry weather returning by the weekend and continuing through Tuesday.

Thursday afternoon temperatures in Idaho were generally in the 70s, with a few places in the 60s. The warmest was 82 at Malad. Morning minimums were in the 40s most places, with mountain areas in the 30s. The coolest was 37 at Stanley and Elk River.

Conditions for cultivation and other outside agricultural work in the Magic Valley will be fair through Saturday, then improving Sunday through Tuesday. Conditions for drying hay will improve by Sunday. Plant growth will continue slow through the first of the week.

Pan evaporation is forecast at 16 inch today and 20 Saturday. Spraying conditions today will be generally fair to good with winds 5 to 12 mph but poor near thunderstorms.

Elsewhere in the nation, the warmest temperature Thursday was 109 at Buckeye and Coolidge, Ariz., while the coolest was 32 at Redmond, Ore.

Postal workers are covered by 4 unions, hampering talks

Postal labor talks ordered to begin

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Postmaster General William F. Bolger Thursday ordered postal service negotiators to begin bargaining immediately for a new contract.

The present contract, covering 800,000 workers, expires July 20. Bolger took the action following a National Labor Relations Board decision dismissing the Postal Service's request to decide the format for contract negotiations with the four labor unions involved.

The Postal Service request had delayed negotiations that were scheduled to start on April 22.

The Postal Service asked the NLRB to act on the request, arguing the four unions wanted to negotiate in an "unworkable" manner.

"I am particularly disappointed that the NLRB did not even see fit to give the Postal Service an opportunity to argue its case," Bolger said in a statement. But he added, "The Postal Service does not wish to leave its employees unprotected and without a contract. Thus, the Postal Service is prepared to bargain immediately with the four unions."

Bolger did not say when negotiations would get started to meet the July 20 contract expiration date.

"Time remains for the parties to settle all issues by the expiration date, and I believe we should be able to achieve settlement by then," Bolger said.

Following the NLRB action, Moe Biller, president of the American Postal Workers Union and Vincent Sombrotto, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers, which together represent 500,000 workers, called on the Postal Service to start negotiations.

"It is in the best interest of postal employees, the postal service itself and the American people that the Postal Service immediately begin negotiating a fair and equitable contract with the duly authorized representatives of its employees," they said in a joint statement.

The Postal Service had asked the NLRB to determine the appropriate bargaining unit because Bolger said the unions wanted an "unworkable" negotiating format with two of the units bargaining together for one contract and the two other units bargaining together but for separate contracts.

States fight for House seats

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Indiana politicians Thursday suggested a change in apportionment rules so a Hoosier can have a seat that now belongs to Montana.

They argued the state should not lose a spot in Congress because of the 1980 census. Predictably, Montana lawmakers cried foul and a battle between the states was joined.

At issue is the complicated formula used to divide the 435 seats in the House among the 50 states. Based on the new census and the present system, Indiana stands to lose a House seat. But the state's entire congressional delegation — 11 House members and two senators — has proposed legislation to change the apportionment rules.

"The currently used equal proportions method is biased and favors small population states over large population states," Indiana Gov. Robert Orr said in testimony prepared for the House subcommittee on census and population.

But Rep. Ron Marleneo, R-Mont., said, "What we have here is a situation where the ball game has been played under a prescribed set of rules, someone has lost, and now they want to change the rules."

"Rule No. 1 must be that we refrain from changing the formula after the census facts are known," said Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont.

The Hoosiers say Indiana and California each were shorted a House seat by the redistricting plan drawn up under the current law. They propose changing the system to correct the shortage — and take one seat away from Montana and not give New Mexico a new one.

The 1980 census shows the nation's population has drifted south and west — and under current rules will carry 17 House seats away from states in the Northeast and Midwest.

Acting Census Bureau Director Daniel Levine, conceding the present law favors smaller states, told the House panel his agency took no position on changing the apportionment method.

New health care plan vowed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker promised Thursday the administration will send to Congress this year a comprehensive bill that uses competition to control health costs.

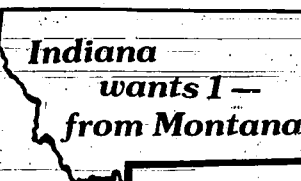

"The further the government has gotten into health care, the higher prices it's climbed," Schweiker said. "There is a large body of evidence to prove... that regulation doesn't work. In fact it contributes to high prices."

"The perverse incentives built into the health care system reward extravagance and penalize economy and good management."

"This administration is committed to trying something new. We intend to loose the forces of the market to make the health care system more competitive. We believe competition will prove to be the single greatest force for controlling prices while providing quality care."

Schweiker said he had formed a departmental task force to come up with ways to solve the problem. He said it was considering tax code changes that will lead to cost-effective insurance coverage.

Reform of Medicaid and Medicare government health insurance for the poor and elderly "were critical," he said.

Under the existing method, Indiana loses one seat to California and New Mexico will get one more, for a total of three.

The Indiana plan would give California 46, cut Montana to one, and keep Indiana and New Mexico the same. No other states would be affected.

"The proposal calls for a return to an apportionment method used in the 1880s that divides the nation's population by 435 seats to give a national average district."

Each state's population is divided by the average, yielding a seat figure that includes a fraction. After each state gets the number of whole seats it is entitled to, the states with the highest fractions get the leftovers.

Both Indiana and California have high fractions, but the present law sometimes gives states with small fractions priority in assignment of the extra seats.

Supporters of the change don't expect passage this year — it would force officials in the four affected states to start over on redistricting plans.

But they are pressing ahead in hopes that, coupled with Supreme Court challenges to the last census, the measure could become law in time to change the system for the 1990 elections.

Senate approves new seal hunting treaty and limits

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Thursday unanimously extended for three more years a 1981 agreement with Canada, Japan and the Soviet Union regulating the killing of fur seals on North Pacific islands between Alaska and Siberia.

About 30,000 seals are killed each year on the North Pacific islands. The newly ratified convention calls for a reduced annual limit of 25,000.

Congress may limit Social Security hikes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., President Reagan's closest friend and Capitol Hill confidant, said Thursday Congress may have to limit cost-of-living increases to bail out Social Security.

Laxalt, who was Reagan's campaign manager, said the $17 billion price tag on inflation adjustments this year makes it an obvious candidate for potential cuts.

The Senate is on record favoring a limitation on cost-of-living increases, but President Reagan has said he opposes it. The Senate plan would limit the cost-of-living increase to the increase in either wages or prices, whichever is lower.

Recently, however, administration spokesmen have been limiting the president might sign a limitation if it were part of a bipartisan compromise to save the retirement system.

"We are going to make some changes... because if nothing is done these funds are going to be in trouble, terrible trouble," Laxalt told a meeting of Republican state chairmen.

"The changes can't be done on the tax side, it's too burdensome already. It will have to be done by rearranging on the benefit side."

"I rather think we're going to have to take away the cost of living, frankly," he said.

A spokesman for Laxalt explained the senator meant limiting such increases — not eliminating them entirely — is something that must be considered.

Reagan has proposed changes in the Social Security system that contain stiff penalties for those who retire early. But that has run into strong opposition on Capitol Hill.

Tycoon... was allowed to remain free while he appeals the conviction. Greene still contends he is innocent.

After the sentence was read, Greene said the verdict was "very, very unexpected."

In asking for the five year sentence, Assistant U.S. Attorney Henry Wykowski told U.S. District Judge Stanley Welgel that if Greene was not sent to prison it would "encourage others" to evade their taxes with the knowledge they would not be fined if caught.

Calm needed in farmer arrests

A lot of ruckus has been made over the arrest of 10 Idaho farmers and ranchers by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The alarm over the arrests for allegedly transporting illegal aliens across state lines is understandable.

It's an incident that touches almost everybody in agriculture in southern Idaho, which relies to some extent on the labor of undocumented Mexican workers.

But the answer is not to attack the Border Patrol for supposed harassment, entrapment and singling out of farmers.

Those concerned about the arrests are meeting in Rupert Saturday. Attending will be Lincoln County Prosecutor Doug Rose and U.S. Rep. George Hansen, who are raising a lot of noise and dust.

The best thing that could come out of the meeting is some monetary support for those arrested, so they can hire a good lawyer, and a determination to change the U.S. laws, so that American farmers do not have to go underground to get a reasonable amount of labor.

If the farmers were entrapped, singled out or unfairly treated by the Border Patrol, they will get their day in court.

Those arrested, many from Lincoln County, were indicted by a grand jury and charged by the U.S. Attorney for Idaho.

Yet Hansen and Rose started shooting at the immigration service as soon as they jumped off their horses.

So far, Rose, in his effort to find improper actions, has only managed to come up with a question about the seizure of a pickup truck as evidence.

The merits of the case cannot be argued without further information, so those concerned should control their instincts to cry foul until evidence and testimony are brought forth in court.

Meanwhile, the arrests do point up the need for a solution to the problem of a lack of an alien labor program in the United States.

Rail subsidies pact is good

A compromise has been reached in Congress over cutbacks in funding for Amtrak.

The plan, which the Reagan Administration supports, means the Pioneer passenger train that serves southern Idaho will probably be saved from certain death.

Although there is a temporary glut of oil in the world and the United States, it makes sense in the long run to keep a national passenger railroad.

A defense against possible crippling of the country's transportation network is diversification. Dependency on any one form of transportation, like dependency on foreign oil, is a bad policy.

Some public subsidy of the semi-governmental Amtrak corporation is a fact of life. But ridership and revenue has increased each year since the system began.

The compromise, spearheaded by Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., will cost $122 million more than the administration's proposal, which would have ended service in almost all parts of the country except the northeast.

However, the $735-million price is still within the administration's budget and requires Amtrak to tighten its belt significantly.

The pressure to cut costs has resulted in a leaner rail service that still serves the whole country.

Los Angeles Times Syndicate

You'd think the children would get tired of it by now, but they never do. We were all sitting in the living room, and I think it was one of the girls who brought it up.

"Tell us, Dad, how you used to just go in a bank and ask the man for a 30-year mortgage on a house and he'd give it to you."

I leaned back in my chair, took a puff on my cigar and said, "Well, it was maybe nine or 10 years ago—I'm not exactly sure. Every paper was running these big advertisements from the banks, and the savings and loan companies were urging you to come in and borrow as much as you wanted to buy a house."

My daughter Connie said to her husband, "You see, didn't I tell you it was so?" Dad doesn't lie.

My son-in-law said, "Yeah, but what was the gimmick? Why would a bank or savings and loan company want to lend you money to buy a house?"

"That was their business then. Randy. They had money lying all over the place and they didn't know what to do with it. They practically came out on the sidewalks on their knees with fistfuls of dollars begging you to take it."

"Yeah, but how much interest were they asking?" my son-in-law wanted to know.

"Five and a half percent, maybe six if you got unlucky."

"All right, Dad," my daughter said, "you're making this all up. No bank ever loaned people money at 5 1/2 percent."

"Ask your mother. She was there when I applied for the loan. She thought 5 1/2 percent was too high for 30 years, but I wasn't in the mood to shop around, so I took it."

"And how much did a house cost in those days, Dad?" my daughter asked.

"You could get a very nice one with three bedrooms and two baths, and a completely installed kitchen and recreation room on a fair-sized lot, for somewhere around $50,000."

"Now I know you're making fun of us," my son-in-law said. "There is no way anyone could ever buy a home for that."

"Oh yeah," I said. "Suppose I told you there used to be homes in very nice neighborhoods you could pick up for $25,000 and no down payment?"

I let that one sink in.

My other daughter said, "Didn't you and Mom almost buy a house for $40,000 in 1963 that recently sold for $150,000 right on the Potomac River?"

"Yep, I turned it down because the owner wouldn't paint it, and I was darned if I was going to pay $500 to put on a new coat. You want to know something? When it sold for $150,000, it still hadn't been painted."

My son-in-law said, "Connie tells me you were offered a townhouse in Georgetown for $57,000 with a swimming pool in the back."

"I might have bought it but the savings and loan fellow got snooty, and said because the house was built in 1789 he could only give me a $50,000 loan at six percent for 25 years. I don't like anyone taking me for a fool, so I just told him what he could do with his loan. Your mother was there."

"I remember it well," my wife said. "I still think about it every time I drive by the house."

"Gosh," my daughter said. "They must have been wonderful days. To think, anybody who wanted to could just go in and buy a home."

I took another puff on my cigar.

"Let's say they were different. You see we fellows, who came back from the second big war, knew how to talk to bankers and savings and loan people. They understood we wanted about to pay more than 6 percent for a loan, and so they didn't push us around. But the kids today don't have any backbone. They'll accept any amount of interest the bank asks for. Heck, if someone ever wanted me to pay 16 percent on a mortgage, I would pick up the papers and make him eat them."

"Now stop that kind of talk," my wife said. "You're just putting on a show for the kids."

"Let him talk, Mom," my daughter Jenny said. "Tell us the time Joe DiMaggio called you up Dad and asked you why you didn't want to borrow any more money from the Bowers Savings Bank in New York City."

Bonds too costly

Editor, Times-News: The Valley School District will decide June 16 on a bond issue for $1.5 million to build a new school.

The interest on these bonds will amount to another $1 million or $1.5 million at the present rate of interest. In the past four and one-half years, interest rates have doubled. Interest of 3 percent has jumped to 16 percent.

The government loans are now 14 1/2 percent and the banks charge 20 percent. The new mortgages may contain an escalating clause as it is expected that rates will go higher.

The interest in these bonds will amount of $1.4 million by the time of amortization in 20 years.

The present budget is $94,725. With the increased 7 percent in teachers' wages, etc., the budget for the year will be well over a million. This will have to be paid every year of the 20 years the bonds are being paid off, also.

This last week I received the government report, a summary of farm prices, expenditures and income. For the past four years farmers have been losing money, selling their produce below the cost of production, according to government reports. Why then be willing to shoulder this debt of millions?

This is an agricultural community and every home in Valley District will be taxed to pay off this debt, a mortgage of 20 years.

As to repairs to the present buildings, all buildings require constant repair and improvement. When the present Valley High School was built, the roof leaked when it was brand new; the first year, it has been constantly repaired and improved. Many of the older homes in the community are strong substantial buildings and built long before the two rural elementary schools were. They are still very substantial, also.

Editor, Time-News:

Re: Valley School bond.
As a taxpayer I want my tax dollars spent in the most efficient way, and at this time I feel a new school is just that.

The $500,000 to $600,000 is just the beginning of a long time of costly repairs, and don't forget these costs have increased along with new building costs. After all these repairs we still have two building which have no more value than they did today.

What if seven, eight, or 10 years down the road, the bond issue comes up again. We pay an increased amount for a new building as well as what we've already paid in repairs. I don't want to pay twice.

As a parent, I've walked into the school when the smell of smoke was thick. I've been there when a large section of the ceiling had fallen through in the office, when one classroom was hot enough to require an open window in mid-winter, while another classroom was too cold.

Children's desks have to be moved to prevent them and their belongings from getting wet due to a leaking ceiling, and library books badly water damaged.

I've gone to school programs children and teachers have worked hard to prepare that parents can't hear because of the poor acoustics. I agree children don't need a lot of frills to learn, but our surroundings do affect how well we do our work, and the present situation is not a healthy environment for learning.

I think we should really look at all the problems at the existing buildings—it's not just a leaking roof. We all want a pleasant comfortable atmosphere to live in, so with all the time our children spend in school shouldn't they have a comfortable place to learn in?

The proposed new building is a no-frills school and I feel the school board should be thanked for working hard to compromise with the community.

With a positive community spirit let's vote "yes" on the bond issue.

Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON—Of all the political ailments that afflict the Congress, none is more irritating than the condition known as Macbeth's syndrome. "We are seeing it today in the matter of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway. Those who oppose this costly project may as well concede defeat. My brothers, we have been bamboozled."

For those unfamiliar with the antics and pains of congressional exercises, let it be said that the syndrome develops from this quandary: Shall we throw good money after bad? Is it better to go ahead with a doubtful project or to end a venture and admit the losses?

This was the problem that troubled the late Lord Macbeth. He and his lady had embarked upon an enterprise that he couldn't get out of. "I am in blood stepped in so far," quoth he, "that should I wade no more, returning were as tedious as go o'er." Macbeth kept going, and he came, as they say, to a Bad End.

So it goes with the Tenn-Tom. This is the 232-mile waterway—the largest project currently under construction by the Corps of Engineers. Intended to connect the Tennessee River with the existing Black Warrior-Tombigbee Waterway down in Alabama. From the very beginning, the justification for this project has been doubtful. Strong opposition developed when the Tenn-Tom was authorized in 1946. More opposition materialized before construction began in 1971. Two or three times since then, the project has barely survived attempts to kill it.

But we are now in this intractable situation: The waterway is $3 to $5 percent complete. More than $1 billion has been spent on this colossal ditch. If construction were stopped dead in its tracks tomorrow, perhaps $600 million in further outlays might be prevented—but the billion dollars already invested would be lost. What-ado?

Such a question is not unknown on Capitol Hill. A few years back, Macbeth's syndrome affected a plan to subsidize construction of a prototype supersonic transport plane. There the decision was to stop the loss and get out. The situation arose again in the matter of another palatial Senate office building; in this case the decision was to plunge ahead. Opposing forces still are battling over the new, the first year, it has been constantly repaired and improved. Many of the older homes in the community are strong substantial buildings and built long before the two rural elementary schools were. They are still very substantial, also.

My own view, for whatever it may be, is that the Tenn-Tom never should have been started in the first place. The principal justification was that vast amounts of money could be saved in shipping costs if mid-America could be linked to the Deep South by a waterway winding up in Mobile and the Gulf. The Tenn-Tom, it was said, would provide an alternate water route for use at times of low water in the Mississippi. Other justifications were thrown in as makeweights—recreational opportunities, increased employment, social uplift, picnic tables, water skiing, and so on.

A new study from the General Accounting Office, just released, once again casts doubts upon the rosy visions of the Tenn-Tom sponsors. The projected savings in freight costs are still phenomenal—whatever is gained by the barge operators will be lost by the railroads. If the Tenn-Tom ever is to pay its way, in terms of a benefit-cost ratio, still more money must be spent between Demopolis and Mobile—perhaps as much as another $200 million over the next 15 years. Before the turn of the century, the taxpayers could be dragged step by step into a $3 billion venture.

To say that Tenn-Tom never should have been started isn't to say much. Things have gone too far to quit now. The waterway will have to be completed. It's sinking feeling tells me that three or four years hence, Congress will have to yield to irresistible arguments that the Demopolis-Mobile improvements be undertaken also.

Under the circumstances, we may as well accept the situation. Perhaps coal experts will justify the heavy investment by Alabama in new port facilities at Mobile. Other navigational improvements of doubtful justification have turned out well. The Tenn-Tom may yet prove its critics wrong. I've been wrong lots of times before.

Nunn: Congress will reject any move to draft women

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., warned Thursday that Congress will never allow registration of women for the draft even if the Supreme Court rules on an all-male system unconstitutional.

Nunn said Congress would abolish registration rather than expand it to include women.

The Georgia senator, former chairman of the Senate military manpower panel, gave his assessment in a Senate speech in anticipation of a Supreme Court decision — expected before the court's summer recess — on the constitutionality of all-male registration.

"The Supreme Court is really deciding whether we will have registration at all," Nunn said. "Of course, the court can depart from all past American experience and declare male-only registration unconstitutional."

"It cannot, however, mandate Congress to pass a bill requiring male and female registration," he said. "My reading of Congress makes it clear to me that there will be no female registration, whatever the court decides."

Nunn said most Americans do not support registering women and "Congress will not force such a program on an unsympathetic populace."

Nunn, a veteran member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said a high court decision requiring registration of women would make it "impossible to shape a mobilization system consistent with the legal ruling and public support."

"The country then would have to rely on a volunteer force, not only in peacetime, but also in war — a result never intended even by the strongest proponents of an all-volunteer force," Nunn said.

He said such an impasse would have "dire consequences for our national security."

Nunn also stressed the need for continuing the all-male registration and warned the administration that ending the current system "would seriously weaken our nation's ability to both deter and respond to national emergencies."

"I find it difficult to believe that any president so deeply committed to improving our national security as President Reagan would intentionally take an action to seriously weaken our defense capability."

Court to rule on Iran assets

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court agreed Thursday to immediately review the legality of the financial deal that led to freedom for the 52 American hostages held 444 days in Iran.

The justices announced they would hear arguments on the case June 24 — a clear indication of how urgently they view the matter.

The high court has not heard a case this late in its term since July 1974 when it forced President Nixon to release the Watergate tapes.

The U.S. and Iranian governments asked the high court to consider the case quickly in order to have a decision by the July 19 deadline for transferring Iranian assets out of the United States.

At stake are hundreds of cases where "American companies" are seeking to recover money they are owed by Iran or lost when the revolutionary government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini took over the nation.

But under agreements signed by President Carter just before he left office, Iranian assets in the United States were frozen and claims against them suspended. The accords provide that all such claims will be settled by an international tribunal.

Only Justice William Rehnquist opposed the decision to hear the case.

The case before the court was brought by Dames and Moore, a Los Angeles engineering firm, seeking to recover a $2.7 million award against Iran that it won in lower courts.

Dames and Moore had contracted with Iran's Atomic Energy Organization for consulting services which were not reimbursed by Iran.

Transfer of the assets under the hostage-freeing agreements would nullify any U.S. court-ordered attachments of Iranian property.

The Treasury Department has told banks to ignore any court attachments and transfer the Iranian assets by July 19.

Trucking officials say deregulation has been a boon, but overdone

WASHINGTON (UPI) — While agreeing that deregulation has been a boon, trucking industry officials charged Thursday that the Interstate Commerce Commission has twisted the intent of the deregulation act Congress passed last year.

"All of our motor carriers have benefitted from the act," American Trucking Associations lawyer Nelson Cooney told a House panel. "At the same time we recognize that the Interstate Commerce Commission has gone too far ... and we've gotten more than we asked for."

Cooney testified before the House subcommittee on surface transportation on the second day of deregulation oversight hearings mandated under the Motor Carrier Act of 1980.

The ICC, he said in a prepared statement, has strayed beyond the "well-defined parameters laid down by Congress." The most flagrant example, he said, was the commission's attempt to scrap the industry's uniform commodity classification system, under which carriers set rates collectively.

"It is difficult ... to point to a single substantial public service-interest benefit that would be served by the prohibition of uniform classification," said James Harkins of the National Motor Freight Traffic Association.

He called the commission's approach "destructive" and against the will of "thousands of shippers and thousands of carriers." Rates are not higher than necessary or producing unreasonable profits for carriers, he said.

On other matters, Cooney said under deregulation Canadian and Mexican carriers have gained easier access to domestic markets, while American carriers are rarely granted operating authority across the border. He urged that reciprocity be made a factor in granting authority to foreign-based carriers.

The subcommittee also heard from R.V. Durham, Teamster union director of health safety, who said a survey of 32 union locals indicated 100,000 union members had lost their jobs in the industry since deregulation.

He said, "The result has been a mad scramble for survival, erosion of rates, deterioration of service and widespread unemployment." And he said, "416 unionized carriers have gone out of business since its passage."

Senate panel hears testimony

Affirmative action discriminates?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A New York City University professor told a Senate panel Thursday "affirmative action" has created new discriminations in universities and is part of a "systematic vandalism" of education by federal agencies.

Miro Todorovich, a Yugoslavian native now a physics professor, said using quotas to insure equal results — not just equal opportunity — creates new forms of discrimination.

"It makes a mockery of merit by insisting on quotas — mislabeled 'numerical goals' — based on race and sex 'guide' selections, appointments and even interviews," Todorovich said.

Todorovich testified in a Senate Judiciary Committee subcommittee on behalf of the University Center for Rational Alternatives, a group formed in the late 1960s to combat student radicalism.

"With a growing sense of horror many of us in the academy watched what can only be called systematic educational vandalism against the universities," Todorovich said.

Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, invited supporters and opponents to speak out at one of a series of hearings on his proposed constitutional amendment forbidding federal and state governments to require racial quotas.

Nathan Z. Dershowitz said the American Jewish Congress believes Congress should take steps to return affirmative action to its original meaning.

"However, we are opposed to doing so by constitutional amendment," Dershowitz said. "We believe the Constitution embodies fundamental law and should not be tampered with to deal with every social issue which arises."

Two witnesses — Chairman William T. Coleman Jr. of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and Vilma Martinez of the Mexican American Legal Defense Fund — staunchly supported affirmative action as practiced today. Coleman, former secretary of transportation, argued opponents of affirmative action lose sight of the fact it is used to correct past discrimination that has tended to keep minorities out of the mainstream of American life.

Ms. Martinez conceded affirmative action, originally formed to seek out minorities and give them opportunities, has become "result oriented" — more focused on results to guarantee minority representation in the work force.

Commission urges Indians be given greater autonomy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Vacillating federal policy has resulted in an inability to implement commitments government has made to Indians, the Civil Rights Commission said Thursday.

"Significant changes are needed to protect Indian rights," it added.

"Federal policy concerning the tribes has vacillated between fostering Indian assimilation and supporting tribal autonomy," said commission chairman Arthur S. Flemming. "Recent federal policy, with which this commission concurs, supports Indian self-determination."

Flemming made his remarks at a news conference in which the commission issued a 192-page report, "Indian Tribes — A Continuing Quest for Survival," summarizing a decade of investigation and hearings by the commission into civil rights issues affecting Indians.

"The existing federal system for protecting Indian rights has significant limitations," the report said. "A legacy of racial stereotypes continues to influence federal Indian policy and hampers implementation of the national policy of Indian self-determination."

Its central recommendation said:

"To encourage the opportunity for self-determination, viability and effective functioning of tribal governments, Congress should recognize Indian tribes on the same basis as it recognizes states and their subdivisions for the purposes of general funding."

Pentagon won't pay schools

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Pentagon will challenge attempts by local school systems to make military families pay for the public school education of their children.

The attempts are apparently in reprisal for proposed cuts in federal funds, Pentagon officials said Thursday.

"Several states thus far have indicated they plan to seek tuition from children living on military bases but who attend local public schools," the report said.

The proposed tuition plan surfaced because the administration seeks to cut impact aid to the localities by 45 percent beginning in fiscal 1982, the financial year starting Oct. 1. In efforts to save hundreds of millions of dollars.

Impact aid goes to areas with large populations of federal employees, such as servicemen living on bases, to offset the tax loss. Military families residing on bases do not pay property taxes, a source of school revenues.

There are 490,000 children of military families in the United States, 150,000 of whom live on bases — the Pentagon said.

In the view of the Pentagon, which has more money to spend than is in the education budgets of all 50 states combined, tuition charges would violate both federal and state constitutions since it would discriminate against military families.

Kania warns Soviets must be appeased Walesa returns Soviet fire

people must be represented

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Labor leader Lech Walesa lashed out at the Soviet Union and hard-line Polish communist leaders Thursday.

He rejected criticism that his Solidarity union was counterrevolutionary or anti-socialist.

"We are not set up to change the government or to politicize. But we have to serve the people," he told workers in a surprise visit to an auto plant in Warsaw.

Walesa's response to the increasing barrage of criticism from Moscow and Poland's allies came as embattled Communist Party leader Stanislaw Kania pledged to continue his reform policy, but warned that Polish leaders must regain Soviet trust.

Walesa, replying to a strong letter sent from the Kremlin to Polish leaders, said, "There were too many confrontations and we were concerned with problems that were not our problems."

He said he rejected the Soviet demand that radicals and extreme militants be rooted out of the union. "They are necessary," he said, "but they should not represent the influential line in the union."

Closing a special government session, Kania, who survived a bitter personal challenge by pro-Soviet hardliners, said he was not surprised at the criticism against him and the other 10 members of the ruling Politburo.

"The policy of reform, he said, 'must be realized more efficiently than so far.'

"It is a national duty to do everything to regain as quickly as possible credibility in the eyes of the Soviet Union."

The government announced after the session there would be strict curbs on handbills, leaflets and articles containing anti-socialist ideas, anti-Soviet attitudes or attacks on the party.

Gasoline will also be rationed in Poland, beginning Monday.

Begin says Israel destroyed secret A-bomb plant in raid

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin said Thursday the Israeli air raid on Iraq's nuclear reactor also destroyed a secret bomb-making facility.

The facility was buried more than 100 feet beneath the reactor itself.

Begin, reacting to the suspension of a delivery of four F-16 jet fighters to Israel because of the raid, also said that Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger tried to get President Reagan to cut all military and economic aid to the Jewish state.

He said Secretary of State Alexander Haig objected and helped tone down the administration's reaction.

Weinberger quickly denied the charge.

Elaborating on the reasons for the nuclear raid, Begin said the Iraqis had constructed a secret facility to make atomic bombs 132 feet below the reactor Israel destroyed.

Although Begin did not denounce the delay in delivering the F-16s as bitterly as some of his subordinates did, his remarks exposing differences within the Reagan administration were considered certain to embarrass the president and put Weinberger on the defensive.

Reagan decided Wednesday to delay the delivery of four F-16s scheduled to go to Israel Friday until Congress decides whether Israel violated U.S. law by using American planes in the raid against the Iraqi nuclear reactor near Baghdad Sunday.

Announcing the decision, Haig said there may have been "a substantial violation" of a 1952 agreement stipulating that arms supplied to Israel can only be used for "self-defense."

The International Atomic Energy Agency said it had inspected the Iraqi reactor in January and found "no evidence that Iraq was attempting to use it to build bombs. Begin said the inspectors — as well as the French technicians building the reactor above ground — did not know about the secret chamber.

Other Israeli officials reacted with anger at the suspension of the F-16 deal, charging the United States had no right to tell Israel how to use its weapons.

In Baghdad, Arab League foreign ministers met to discuss their reaction to the raid called on the United States and all other nations to sever relations with Israel and cut off all economic and military aid.

At Iraq's request, the U.N. Security Council was also meeting Friday. Diplomats said the United States might support a resolution criticizing Israel for the raid but was sure to veto anything stronger.

In Washington, Reagan invited the ambassadors of Israel and five Arab nations to the White House for hastily arranged meetings to discuss the raid, Philip Habib's mission in Lebanon and Mideast peace in general.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan regarded the raid as evidence that "the only answer in the Middle East is to achieve a true peace."

Reagan appeared eager to press that message upon the influential Saudis and other Arab moderates, who regard the U.S. reaction to the raid as a test of its determination to pursue an even-handed policy in the Middle East.

The Reagan administration is trying to tack a delicate course between its commitment to Israel and the damage U.S. officials fear the raid has done to its peace initiative Lebanon and its effort to convince Arab states that their biggest security threat is the Soviet Union, not Israel.

They will seek prior approval. It said no further action is warranted.

The $9 million Saudi shipment of American-made arms to the Sudan included 53 Korean War-vintage M-41 light tanks, 17 M-47 medium tanks, machine guns, rifles, pistols, mortars, ammunition and non-lethal military equipment.

In a letter Monday to committee chairman Charles Percy, R-Ill., Richard Fairbanks, assistant secretary of state for congressional relations, said the administration supports Saudi attempts "to improve the Sudan's military capability" as part of a common effort to strengthen "the security of friendly states in the region."

Fairbanks said Saudi Arabia told the United States that from previous consultations with Washington on arms transfers, it was under the impression the United States had approved the shipments to the Sudan.

Saudis transferred U.S. arms illegally

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Saudi Arabia made an unauthorized transfer of American-built tanks and other weapons to the Sudan in a violation of U.S. law.

But, the violation arose from "a genuine misunderstanding," according to a document obtained Thursday.

The State Department, reporting on the case to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the Saudis have assured Washington that in the future, they will seek prior approval. It said no further action is warranted.

Manson claims he's innocent during incoherent interview

VACAVILLE, Calif. (UPI) — Convicted mass murderer Charles Manson, in a rambling and often incoherent interview released Thursday, proclaimed his innocence and blamed society and a bad childhood for his mispent life.

Television personality Tom Snyder interviewed Manson during the weekend at the California Medical Prison at Vacaville, where he is serving concurrent life sentences for leading a group of cultists in the murders of actress Sharon Tate and eight other people in 1969.

He will be eligible for parole this November.

A 50-minute segment edited from the two-hour interview will be aired on NBC's "Tomorrow Coast to Coast" show at 12:30 a.m. Saturday. A transcript was released Thursday in New York.

"This is a very very sick man and a very very scared man," Snyder told reporters Thursday at a press preview of the interview. "When challenged, all the bravado, all the arrogance, all the intensity disappears and he backs down like a puppy dog."

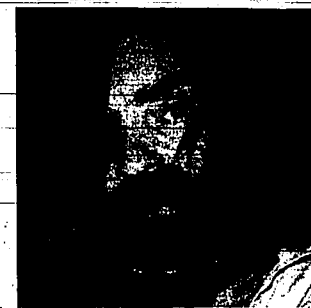

Snyder, in the interview, asked Manson to tell what happened in the mass murder, but the convicted killer, circling in his cell — evaded the question, proclaimed his innocence and blamed society and a bad childhood for his fate.

When told that many people believe Manson would kill again if he were released, Manson said: "Well, you guys are informed. I haven't killed anyone."

When asked how he got involved in the drama "where people got killed," Manson replied: "Well, I was born illegitimately. That put me on the other side of the law. I've been an outlaw ever since. I went to prison ... I learned everything you could learn ..."

Snyder asked whether Manson personally tied up Leno and Rosemary LaBianca in their Los Angeles home before sending his fellow cultists to kill them, but Manson only mumbled about "the Hole in the Wall Gang" ... "Turkey in the sky" ... "a big fat dead rat laying in the water," and ecology.

During the interview, Manson said that the body of

convicted mass murderer

Sharon Tate was "make-believe," and that "surely, I know who they were," referring to her killers.

Snyder at one point in the interview asked Manson who still has long dark hair and a full beard — if he ever was a "heavy user of dope."

"No," said Manson. "I smoked a little grass and I've taken some acid, mescaline, psilocybin, peyote and mushrooms, but actually take dope? No ..."

Asked if he is afraid to die, Manson replied: "Some times I feel I'm scared to live ... dying is easy ... getting up every day and doing this again and again is hard."

Snyder also asked Manson what he fears most. "Maniacs outside," he replied.

Nostalgic trip turns to nightmare for 2 teens near Coeur d'Alene

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (UPI) — A nostalgic lakeside cottage visit turned into a night of rape, battery and robbery for two Spokane girls, Coeur d'Alene police said.

Officers said the girls, ages 16 and 17, went to the "Lakeview Court Cottages" Tuesday night for one last stay before the cottages were to be torn down to make way for condominiums.

The girls were beaten, raped and robbed by a man wearing a "Property of Alcatraz" T-shirt, officers said.

A suspect was being sought on rape, aggravated battery and aggravated robbery charges, but police declined to release his name.

The girls' ordeal began when they arranged to spend a night in the cottages without their parents' knowledge.

The 17-year-old victim told police she had visited the cottages several times before with her parents. When she heard they soon would be demolished, she and her friend decided to celebrate the end of the school year with one last night by Coeur d'Alene Lake.

Officers said each girl told her parents she was staying the night at her friend's house.

Police said the girls checked in and then spent several hours in downtown Coeur d'Alene before returning to the room about 11 p.m.

When they returned, a man carrying a pistol confronted them and demanded money.

The girls told police the man ordered them to take off their clothes, tied up the 16-year-old, and approached the older girl. Officers said the girl resisted and was choked, beaten unconscious and raped.

The man then raped the younger girl, took $20 from the victims' clothing and fled, officers said.

The girls returned to Spokane and were taken by a relative to a Spokane hospital.

The suspect was described as white, 19 to 23 years old, about 5-9, 150 pounds with a small beard.

Moderates, extremists riot in Iran

ANKARA, Turkey (UPI) — Moslem extremists and supporters of besieged Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr fought running street battles in Tehran Thursday with knives, clubs and bricks.

Revolutionary guards opened fire to break up the clashes, witnesses said.

The rioting, in which scores of people were reported injured, came a day after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini dismissed the moderate Bani-Sadr as commander-in-chief of the armed forces, stripping him of his last real power.

The street fighting erupted after about 1,000 Hezbollah (God Party) gang members besieged Bani-Sadr's downtown office, calling him "another ahab" and demanding he be tried and executed.

The militants, carrying caricatures of Bani-Sadr in the guise of the late Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, then streamed through the streets shouting "the revolution will continue until the second shah is executed."

Bani-Sadr reportedly was holed up in his office as indications mounted he would either be removed by Khomeini or forced to step down as president.

Witnesses said the worst street fighting was around Tehran University, where scores of people were injured in clashes between rival groups of moderates and extremists. Riotous revolutionary guards intervened and shots were heard around the campus, but there was no immediate indication of Bani-Sadr's whereabouts.

Dozens of Bani-Sadr's supporters were arrested, the reports said. Ayatollah Mohammad Beheshti, the head of the ruling Islamic Republican Party and Supreme Court chief justice, told a news conference a three-member presidential council would take over if Bani-Sadr stepped down or was removed.

Beheshti said the council would consist of himself, Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai and Majlis (parliament) Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani — all leaders of the campaign to topple the president.

Khomeini removed Bani-Sadr from the military command after suddenly dropping his neutrality in the political feud between Moslem fundamentalists and moderates.

The president's control over the military was feared by the fundamentalists, who believed Bani-Sadr would use the power in a showdown with the mullahs.

Schlict backs 4 agencies in restored budget requests

LEWISTON (UPI) — The head of the Idaho Division of Financial Management will recommend that money cut from state agency budgets last year to prevent a spending deficit be restored to only four of those agencies.

Larry Schlict said he will recommend that $180,000 be restored to four budgets — and that money will be only for emergencies documented by the applying agency. His recommendation will be considered Monday by the state Board of Examiners, which has the final say.

Schlict said he will recommend that $50,300 go to the WAMI medical education program at the University of Idaho and the remainder to the state departments of corrections, law enforcement and military services (disaster services and national guard).

The WAMI money would go to pay for the contracted costs of educating 60 Idaho students at the University of Washington medical school at Seattle. If the $50,300 is not paid, the state of Idaho could be sued for default on a contract, said Guy Anderson, WAMI director at UI.

Late last summer, the Board of Examiners ordered all state agencies to reduce spending by 3.85 percent after revenue projections indicated the state would finish in the red if spending continued at its budgeted rate. Virtually every state agency applied to have the cuts restored.

Projections now show a $13.5 million surplus will be available to the state at the end of the fiscal year July 1. That projection is up from those made earlier this spring, which ranged from $6 million to $14 million.

The state Board of Education had asked the Board of Examiners to restore all of the nearly $2.85 million in general education budgets at the four state universities and college and in the special program budgets at Idaho.

The requests for restoration were thorough and the need for infusion of money was clear for many higher education programs, Schlict said. But many of the needs did not represent true emergencies, he said.

More flooding likely along Snake, Boise

By United Press International

Thousands of acres of land near Rexburg were submerged under floodwaters from the Henry's Fork of the Snake River and other portions of the Snake River were expected to reach flood stage late Thursday, according to the National Weather Service.

A weather system which might bring more precipitation and more flooding to the area was expected to move over eastern Idaho late today.

Hydrologist Lee Krogh said the Henry's Fork near Rexburg crested at 10.15 feet Wednesday and had begun to recede although the river would probably remain above flood stage until noon today. Krogh said as much as 1,000 acres of cropland and 3,000 to 5,000 acres of pasture land and bottom land were submerged by the floodwaters.

However, he said no homes were flooded and only one county road was covered by the floodwaters.

The Snake River near Heise was at 8 foot Thursday, Krogh said. The river's flood stage at that point is 7 feet. He said the river was expected to remain above flood stage for several days.

Downstream near Shelley, the Snake was expected to rise above its 12-foot flood stage about noon today.

Krogh said only minor flooding was expected in that area.

Further downstream at Firth and Blackfoot, minor flooding was expected late Thursday night and today.

Krogh said the Boise River at Boise would remain above flood stage through today and probably for several more days. He said the river probably would continue to run over flood stage until reservoir officials "get a handle on how much rain comes in this weekend."

"(Reservoir regulators) are trying to move excess water down the stream in case this ends up a major storm instead of a few sprinkles," Krogh said. Krogh said forecasters expect a storm to move over eastern Idaho late today and Saturday. He said the storm could drop as much as one-half inch of precipitation.

"One saving grace is going to be that as the storm goes by the weather will turn cold," he said.

The cold weather could bring freezing temperatures to the mountains, slowing runoff, he said.

Krogh said high water in the Snake at Idaho Falls threatened a power company construction site today. He said sandbags had been placed around the site in hopes of stopping any flooding. No other flooding was expected in the area, Krogh said.

BLM to hold 3 hearings about Medicine Lodge

IDAHO FALLS (UPI) — The Idaho Falls District of the Bureau of Land Management will hold three public meetings later this month to gather public input on a proposed land-use plan for the Medicine Lodge Resource Area.

The 800,000-acre Medicine Lodge area is located northeast of Idaho Falls and includes the counties of Bonneville, Fremont, Jefferson, Madison, Clark and Teton. One of the first steps of the planning process is gathering information from the public to identify the issues that should be covered by the plan.

Public meetings will be held from 7 to 10 p.m. June 23 in Dubois at Lindy Ross Elementary School, June 24 in St. Anthony at Central Elementary School and June 25 in Idaho Falls at Eagle Rock Junior High School.

Burlesque club sues over license

BOISE (UPI) — A Garden City burlesque club is seeking a 4th District Court ruling to block any plan by the Idaho Department of Law Enforcement to revoke the tavern's beer and liquor licenses next month.

The Hunt Club could lose its liquor licenses under an amendment to the state liquor law passed earlier this year by the Idaho Legislature. In effect, the amendment would ban topless performers from dancing at establishments where alcoholic beverages are sold. The amendment goes into effect July 1.

In the suit, filed against Law Enforcement Director Kelly Pearce and state Bureau of Investigations Chief Richard Cade, Hunt Club attorney William Tway argues that the date the amendment goes into effect should not usurp the tavern's liquor licenses, which were issued before the amendment was passed and does not expire until Dec. 31.

"That amendment doesn't affect a liquor license that's already been issued for this year," Tway said. "But the Department of Law Enforcement has threatened to file a violation if the Hunt Club doesn't comply with the amendment by July 1."

Jay Bates, legal counsel for the department said, however, "We'll take whatever action we feel is necessary," including revoking the Hunt Club's liquor licenses, if the bar's dancers continue to violate provisions of the law.

Bear wanders onto fields

STRASBURG, Colo. (UPI) — The tiny farming community near Strasburg, population 1,000, on the sunny, open plains east of Denver is hardly a place a black bear would go for vacation.

But one yearling bear did just that, and even took in a little dog-chasing while he was there.

Rudy Hoffman, an Arapahoe County sheriff's deputy, said a farmer spotted the bear tearing after his barking dog in a wheat field about 7 a.m. one morning and rescued the dog by calling him from his truck. After a speedy getaway in the pickup, the unidentified farmer made a few calls.

The terrain near south of Strasburg is more suited for jackrabbits and antelope than bears. A tree is a rarity and barbed-wire fences provide the only slight diversion from miles upon miles of open plains.

Tom Howard, a surprised district wildlife manager, arrived with a tranquilizer gun to being the long process of capturing the lost bear.

"When I got there, he was just plowing ahead through the middle of a two-foot-high wheat field," Howard said.

Howard approached the bear on foot, stinging him with a tranquilizer dart about seven miles south of Strasburg in Arapahoe County. The drug didn't take hold until the bear made his way to "the only water hole within 10 miles."

The bear was brought to Waterton Canyon southwest of Denver.

"It's just a case of a misplaced animal," Howard said. "It wasn't hurting anyone and there are a lot of people who are out in that area. But his natural curiosity would have gotten him in trouble before long."

Safety panel calls for ban on new caps

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Consumer Product Safety Commission staff, trying to get a grip on a frustrating subject, said Thursday a new either-or style of child-resistant cap for drugs and other materials should be banned.

The staff recommendation said the spreading use of caps that offer the option of being easy to open could undermine efforts to reduce accidental poisoning.

But the report also suggested current standards may have made child-resistant caps too inconvenient, and that they should be revised.

Under a 1970 law, prescription drugs, some over-the-counter drugs such as aspirin, and a variety of household products such as turpentine and lighter fluid must have caps that are difficult for children to open.

Consumers may ask that prescriptions be put in vials with non-resistant caps.

But the staff told a commission briefing that manufacturers are using more caps that can be used two ways.

There are two styles of the new caps. One has a removable plug and the other is a "piggyback" arrangement — one end of the cap is child-resistant but when the cap is turned over it opens easily.

The staff said that about 10 percent of prescription drugs are now packaged in vials with dual purpose caps. In only a "short time," the staff predicted, other manufacturers will follow suit. It noted that one non-prescription drug maker has begun using the flip caps on vitamins and other products.

The report also said current regulations have not sufficiently reduced accidental poisonings from prescription drugs. It said either too many consumers get their prescriptions in vials with regular caps, or they deliberately disable the child-resistant cap or transfer the drugs into another bottle.

It estimated there are now about 9 million prescriptions in American homes which are not child-resistant. If things are not changed and dual purpose caps come on the market, it said, there will be 112 million such prescriptions and the downward trend in accidental poisonings may be reversed.

The commission scheduled a public meeting on the issue for next week and will decide the matter at a later date.

Hope for interest dip puts Dow past 1,000

By FRANK W. SLUSSER
United Press International

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial climbed above the 1,000 level Thursday.

It hit its highest level in more than two months in a stock market rally based on hopes for lower interest rates.

Trading was heavy.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which slipped 0.56 point Wednesday, gained 13.51 points to 1,007.42, the highest level since it finished at 1,015.22 on March 25, the advance was the biggest since it rose 19.09 on March 25.

This was the first time since April 29 that the Dow had closed above 1,000 and marked the seventh time this year it had successfully crossed the psychologically important barrier.

Several brokers have predicted the closely watched average would top its 1981 high of 1,024.05 set April 27. But many observers wonder if the market will be able to escape the profit taking that historically appears at the 1,000 level.

The rally accelerated after the government reported May retail sales rose only 0.2 percent, reinforcing Wall Street's belief that the economy has slowed down and interest rates will decline as a result.

Investors were unperturbed that no major banks have followed the lead of Marine Midland Bank in lowering their prime lending rate a half point to 19 1/2 percent.

The Federal Reserve has spawned hopes of a interest rate retreat by reporting a recent slowdown in the growth of the nation's money supply.

Brokers said there was a near stampede by big investors to buy interest-sensitive stocks during the afternoon.

As a result, the New York Stock Exchange index rose 0.85 to 77.63 and the price of an average share increased 38 cents. Advances topped declines 1,144-430 among the 1,920 issues traded at 4 p.m. EDT.

Big Board turnover totaled 59,530,000 shares up from the 53,200,000 traded Wednesday. This was an indication institutions were more active.

Aside from interest rate hopes, there was little in the news background to propel the market forward.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter at 4 p.m. totaled 67,400 shares, compared with 57,490,000 traded Wednesday.

The American Stock Exchange index climbed 2.94 to 368.41 and the price of a share added 15 cents. The National Association of Securities Dealers' NASDAQ index of over-the-counter issues gained 1.94 to 224.34.

Coal slurry pipelines win payouts

NEW YORK (UPI) — If the nine proposed coal slurry pipelines are built, they could transport between 150 million and 175 million tons of coal annually by the year 2,000 out of projected U.S. production of 2 billion tons, a pipeline executive said Thursday.

"Coal producers and consumers, whether domestic or foreign, will be better served by a combination transportation system which includes pipelines," Kenneth L. Lay, president of Transco Cos. Inc., told the Coal Slurry 1981 symposium in New York.

The United States now produces about 800 million tons of coal a year. Output is expected to rise to 2 billion tons by 2,000 as global demand for coal escalates.

"The economics of coal slurry pipelines are very enticing" for both U.S. and foreign users because pipelines provide cheaper transportation than railroads and would spur U.S. coal production, Lay said.

He said slurry pipelines could help meet rising export demand by bringing coal to a mooring point offshore and loading coal carriers that now are congesting U.S. ports.

But Lay expressed doubt that all nine of the announced U.S. slurry pipelines would be built.

The federal government must pass legislation providing the right of federal eminent domain for these projects so that they can get underway," he said. "Unlike gas pipelines coal pipelines don't currently enjoy eminent domain, so that railroads can block construction."

Slurry pipelines, developed in the late 19th century, transport a liquefied mixture of ground coal and water to the end user, where the coal is dried and then burned like conventional coal.

News briefs

Albertson's plans Colorado center

BOISE (UPI) — Albertson's Inc. plans to build a $14.3 million, 350,000-square-foot distribution center at Aurora, Colo.

Officials said the site would include a 250,000-square-foot dry grocery warehouse; a 90,000-square-foot refrigerated area for perishables and frozen foods, an 8,000-square-foot vehicle maintenance garage; administrative areas and a 65-bay truck dock.

The distribution center, to provide dry goods, meat, produce and other items to more than 60 Albertson's stores in Wyoming and Colorado, will employ about 200 people and its size could be doubled later, Albertson's officials said.

Construction is scheduled to begin this month and the center should be ready for operation by June 1982.

Utah Power discontinues surcharge

BOISE (UPI) — Utah Power & Light Co. notified the Idaho Public Utilities Commission Wednesday that it was ending the surcharge in its Idaho service area because coal deliveries were resuming.

A PUC spokesman said UP&L ended the surcharge effective Monday after the national coal miners' strike was settled and deliveries resumed to the utility's coal-fired plants in Utah.

The PUC had granted UP&L power to impose a 4.0 cents-per-kilowatt-hour surcharge in its Idaho service area throughout June to compensate for the cost of buying more expensive electricity outside the UP&L system.

May retail sales almost unchanged

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The nation's retail sales remained virtually unchanged in May, rising only 0.2 percent to a level of $85.9 billion, according to an advance estimate Thursday by the Commerce Department.

The department said retail sales in April were $86.0 million lower than the advance estimate for that month. The April figure was $85.7 billion, which was a 2.1 percent drop from March, and the largest monthly decline since a 2.3 percent tumble in December 1979.

VW to test gear shifting indicator

DETROIT (UPI) — Volkswagen of America said Thursday it plans to test a device that notifies drivers of the best time to shift gears for optimum fuel economy.

A VW spokesman said the Economy Light will be installed on 2,000 Rabbit subcompact equipped with a 1.6-liter diesel engine.

The device, which monitors rpm and other engine factors, flashes an amber light on the dashboard when the best time arrives to shift to a higher gear. It doesn't control the engine and can be ignored by the driver or overridden.

Despite long 'problem' list, savings and loans healthy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman Richard T. Pratt said Thursday 265 savings and loan associations are on his agency's "problem" list, probably the highest number on record.

But Pratt told a news conference the earnings squeeze affecting the savings and loan industry in recent months, which stems from high interest rates, has begun to ease as these rates have begun to edge down.

"The situation has improved," he told reporters. He assured depositors their savings are not in danger.

"The savings and loan business is viable," Pratt said. "It can deal with its problems. The insurance fund which backs it is adequate for the problems that exist at this time."

The bank board is the regulatory agency for some 4,700 savings and loan associations, which are federally chartered or insured through its subsidiary, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

Associations are put on its "problem" list, Pratt said, when they "are experiencing abnormal problems that we think require close monitoring."

There were 126 institutions on the list at the end of last year and the present number is "probably" a record, he said.

In the past, Pratt said, 90 percent of institutions put on the list have recovered from their problems without any assistance from the FSLIC. About 1 percent have gone into liquidation.

Stock trade leaves Dome No. 2

TORONTO (UPI) — Dome Petroleum became Canada's second largest oil and gas producer by trading its 42 million shares of Dome Inc. for 53 percent of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Co. Ltd., Dome president William Richards said Thursday.

The transaction was completed just a day before Richards' speech Thursday to the Toronto Society of Financial Analysts, and the Dome executive would not detail plans for HBGO's assets.

However, he assured the analysts

Dome was confident it can carry the debt load resulting from the transaction, largely through rapidly increasing cash flow from Bonaville Sea production and other projects.

Richards, bucking widely held pessimistic views of the Canadian oil industry, said Dome was convinced that "over the next decade Canada will provide the most attractive opportunities available (in the world) in the oil and gas business."

He said the Dome group — including Dome Petroleum, Dome Canada, Hudson's Bay, TransCanada Pipe Lines, and Sovereign Oil & Gas — was well situated to profit from those opportunities.

"The Dome group also includes Dome Mines Ltd. and interests in several smaller mining companies."

Hudson's Bay added 78,000 barrels a day to Dome's previous total oil production of 75,000 barrels daily and 388 million cubic feet of daily gas production to the group's 358 million-cubic feet.

Looking for a job often proves to be full-time activity © Field Enterprises, Inc.

How much time does the average unemployed American spend hunting for a job?

Shockingly little.

Could it be that a key reason the jobless rate remains high is that the unemployed fail to realize that looking for a job is a job in itself, to be worked at every day, five days a week? Experts are convinced that this is so.

A Census Bureau national survey discloses that of the individuals who found jobs during 1972 (latest reporting date), 65 percent had spent less than five hours per week looking for work and only 13 percent had devoted 16 hours a week or more to the task.

Of the 7 percent of the workforce (or roughly 8 million individuals) now out of work, slightly more than one-quarter have been unemployed for 15 weeks or more and about 15 percent have been jobless for a half-year or longer.

Jobs are available for most of these so-called long-term unemployed, many labor market specialists believe. But these are precisely the people who lack the training, support and confidence to search for those jobs and then to be accepted.

A wide variety of job-search training programs, centering on this theory, have been launched in the past five years — some managed by schools, some by volunteer groups, still others by private organizations and government agencies. Among them all, one of the most successful is a federally-funded project supervised by the Office of Manpower Affairs at Cambridge, Mass., called The Job Factory.

As its name implies, it treats job-seekers as workers. Participants are expected to "punch in" daily at 8 a.m. and "punch out" at 4:30 p.m.

The program lasts for four weeks but the participants spend only the first few days in classrooms, reviewing job histories, discussing career goals, working on resumes. They are taught telephoning and interview skills. They practice these skills on each other and then see themselves on video tape for self-criticism purposes.

Quickly they realize the effectiveness of: maintaining eye contact; not smoking, dressing neatly, addressing the interviewer by name, making it clear that they really want to work, never making critical comments about past employers, asking questions about the company and the job for which they believe they are qualified and are applying.

"People learn from the group," the manager of the Job Factory says. "Looking for work is by its very nature discouraging, tiring, ego-bruising, so support and encouragement are key. The group helps provide these positive forces for each other."

About 500 people have completed the Job Factory program since its inception in 1976. Included have been teenagers, handicapped, ex-law offenders and many minorities. More than two-thirds of the participants have found jobs; the cost of each placement now averages $750.

In an unpublished review of nationwide job search assistance programs, Robert Wagmann of the University of Houston has identified some of the search strategies that have made the training programs successful. If you are or if you will be seeking a job, heed these tips:

(1) Regard job-hunting as a real JOB — and expect that it, like any other job, demands time, persistence and discipline.

(2) Recognize that while you can get a good job through ads or employment agencies, competition for jobs that are advertised tends to be fierce because virtually anyone who can read has access to them.

(3) Apply directly to an employer, even without any hint there's a job opening. As Wagmann stresses, positions are often filled by word-of-mouth, and it's wise to be on a good list.

(4) Try to get as many job interviews as you can and concentrate as much as you can on smaller firms which rarely use want ads and must be approached directly. Use the phone book to track down the names.

(5) If you can see a layoff coming, start looking for a job while you are still working. It "makes a much better impression."

(6) Expect to be discouraged. Guard against anger, apathy or feeling defeated. These are qualities that will show in an interview.

Dear Abby

Secretary follows her own conscience

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
© Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Concerning the letter from NO GUTS, on secretaries doing personal work for bosses: That problem will never improve unless we secretaries speak up for our rights. It isn't necessary to be discourteous or surly; a simple "I prefer not to do your personal correspondence for you" should suffice. I've done secretarial work for 10 years and have always spoken out when I've felt a boss's request was an imposition on my workload.

The idea of the catch-all underling secretary, and the big superior boss will disappear only when secretaries stop thinking of themselves in those terms. My three basic rules:

1. Take your complaints to your boss, not to everyone in the office.
2. Don't compromise your values by doing anything that is against your principles.

3. Don't do extra work without pay. No one else does.
—MAD IN SIERRA FOOTHILLS.

DEAR MAD: Your "basic rules" are fine, but in applying for any kind of job, it is essential to have a clear-cut understanding of what the job will consist of. However, the applicant for a secretarial position who tells a prospective employer that she "prefers to do no personal correspondence" may be looking for a job for a very long time.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a psychiatrist. A patient has asked him to play the role of her father (give her away) at her wedding. The ceremony is taking place in Nevada and she will pay for his trip. I was not invited.

When I objected to my husband going without me, he said that there was no "mother figure" in therapy, and he was annoyed that I would object. I don't feel good about this and would appreciate your thoughts on the matter.

—LEFT OUT IN ILLINOIS
DEAR LEFT OUT: It's not unusual for a psychiatrist to become a father figure in the course of therapy, and in some therapeutic situations he might even act as a surrogate father at a patient's wedding — assuming her own father is dead. However, you should have been invited to accompany your husband, and your husband should have insisted upon it.

DEAR ABBY: A waitress in Milwaukee asked why people always seem to want "tables" that have not been cleared. You said it was because of the coziness of clutter. Well, there are other reasons:

Waiters and waitresses know which tables are the least desirable, and they try to get those tables filled up first. For instance, if a table is under an air-conditioning vent, or near the radiator, or right next to the restroom, or in the line of traffic, or facing the wall, or too near the kitchen, or too close to the music, it's not the best table in the house.

On the other hand, some people prefer a table near a window so they can watch their car or enjoy the view. Some people choose a table so they can be in a certain station to get a preferred waiter or waitress. Some like to watch the door so they can see who comes in (especially if they're with someone they don't want to be seen with). And some people sit at a table that hasn't been cleared to ensure instant service. They know that the waiters will be there in two seconds to be sure the newcomers don't pick up their tip.

Weddings

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM COLSON

Nutsch-Colson

JEROME — Julia Nutsch of Jerome and William Colson of Twin Falls exchanged wedding vows in a nuptial mass May 8.

Father R.A. Heenan officiated at St. Jerome's Catholic Church. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Nutsch of Jerome and the bridegroom is the son of Woodena Colson of Idaho Falls and Richard Colson of Lake Stevens, Wash.

The bride wore a white A-line style gown of organza and lace with a high Queen Anne neckline, lace sleeves with a chapel length train. She wore a finger tip veil capped with lace and pearls. Her bouquet was a large nosegay of pink and white carnations, roses and bunny tails.

Rita Ehrmantraut, cousin of the bride, was the maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Annette Colson, sister of the bridegroom, of Idaho Falls and Keetee Hobbs of Jerome.

Mike Norman of Idaho Falls was best man. Curt Vincent of Kimberly and Bill Hobbs of Jerome were groomsmen.

Daria Nutsch, sister of the bride, presented a bouquet of pink carnations to the statue of the Virgin Mary.

Mike Nutsch and Gary Huber, cousins of the bride, were altar boys.

Anthony Nutsch, cousin of the bride, was the reader, and Edwin and Donald Nutsch, uncles of the bride, were ushers.

Janet Lamm was the organist and Linda Huber, cousin of the bride, was soloist.

A reception was held in the parish hall following the wedding. Rachelle Colson, sister of the bridegroom, attended the guest book. DeNene Dixon and Kaye Turner handled the gift table. Rita Nutsch, cousin of the bride, and Andrea Colson, sister of the bridegroom, were gift bearers.

Cake servers were Mildred Chonack, aunt of the bride, and Susan Chonack, cousin of the bride. Marge Nutsch and Leona Nutsch, aunts of the bride, and Pete Schmidt, great-uncle of the bride, served punch.

A rehearsal dinner was held at China Village, hosted by the mother of the bridegroom.

Special guests included Lillie Bearens of Twin Falls, great-grandmother of the bride.

After a short trip, the couple will reside west of Jerome. The bride is employed at Land Title and Escrow, Inc., in Jerome and the bridegroom at Independent Meat Co. in Twin Falls.

Crunch on public broadcasting

Stations battle of survival as government aid is slashed

By BOB WISEHART
Newhouse News Service
and KENNETH CLARK
United Press International

LOS ANGELES — Public television faces the future with a cascade of brave new words.

But words, as they say, are cheap. And that's good — because if words cost much money, chances are public TV couldn't afford any.

Facing a collection of 100-plus TV columnists who get paid to listen to this sort of thing, Public Broadcasting Service President Larry Grossman called down fire and brimstone on the Reagan administration, which has suggested that when it comes to budget cutting, a good place to start is public TV.

This, thundered Grossman, "is slashing away at the very institutions that make a civilization worth saving. A society's greatness is judged by its human achievement. This is a true test of whether or not we have our national priorities straight."

That'll show those cultureless Philistines in Washington.

Grossman's — and public TV's — problem is this: Earlier this year, the Reagan administration recommended that the federal government withdraw all financial support of public TV.

"There is no more basis for the federal government to play a leading role in supporting public television than there is for the government to play a similar role in the publication of novels or textbooks or in a theatrical production," the administration said.

Since then, the administration has softened its position and has cut $35 million out of the federal government's 1983 gift to public TV. Public TV gets its budget a couple of years in advance to avoid political pressure.

But things should go downhill from there.

Many of the cultural programming elements people turn to public TV for eventually will be available to viewers on cable TV. Public TV will have lots of rivals where it now has none.

Underfunded, surrounded by rivals, and damned by some as an elitist institution — is public TV a former sacred cow that shortly will be turned into hamburger?

PBS solutions hobbled by regulations

Order-of-the-day-for-television-stations-under-the umbrella of the Public Broadcasting Service: "Get out and earn a living, but make sure you don't turn a profit."

That's the sort of "Catch 22" entanglement George J. Markatos and his colleagues in PBS are facing with the Reagan Administration's determination to eliminate the federal funding that covers one-third of their operating capital.

"If the government wants to get out, I personally would welcome it, but let's stop horsing around trying to read what the politicians are trying to say," said the director of the Enterprise Division at WNET in New York. "Let them get out, but at the same time let's phase it out so people get a chance to recover, because it's a hell of a blow."

The immediate blow came last week when Congress slashed funds already appropriated for PBS from $172 million to $137 million. So far, funds for next year remain intact, but funding for fiscal 1984 still is on the chopping block.

Federal funding is not Markatos' chief worry. He's a realist and he knows it's going. What bothers him is the fact that laws restricting what a non-profit organization can and cannot do to make a living are not going with it.

Henry Beeton, the manager of WGBH in Boston, which is one of PBS's most vigorous producing stations, is a swing of ideas where retrenchment is concerned — from running television lotteries to setting up a text broadcasting system to compete with newspapers. Some of his ideas already are in place and several more await only the imprimatur of the law.

But the vehicle of the law makes a ponderous ambulance and Beeton worries that many of the Public Broadcasting Service's 288 stations will expire before it reaches them.

"The risk is that public television will be gutted," he said of the threat to end all federal financing of PBS. "I think some of the smaller, marginal stations will cease to exist. The next three years are crucial. At the end of that time period, if the support withers away, my guess is of these 288, close to a third might disappear."

Beeton isn't worried that WGBH or its strongly based program-producing sister stations will disappear, but he said if laws restricting the ability of PBS to earn its own living are not eased, programming will be sadly eroded.

"Television is a very expensive medium if it's done at all professionally and that is the core of the problem," he said. "At the same time, it's a tremendously efficient medium to reach large numbers of people. One Boston Symphony concert would reach approximately four and a half million people, more people than could ever attend Symphony Hall in a couple of years."

But a Boston Symphony production costs about $200,000. An hour-long, factual documentary runs $250,000 and a fully mounted dramatic effort can hit three times that figure.

To raise that kind of money, public television stations are being told to hustle in the marketplace.

WNET in New York formed its Enterprise Division to make a living.

In years past, "enterprise" has meant little more in PBS than the annual telethon in which the service begs its viewers to send in money, knowing the government will match every $2 from the public sector with $1 from the federal till.

"It has to mean more now and Markatos said if the bureaucrats and lawmakers will only get out of the way, he'll give it a proper new money-making definition.

"Some of the proposals now are not only to cut the federal funding, but also to restrict some of these commercial enterprises," he said. "They are saying 'deduct what you make commercially from the federal grant.' That's certainly a disincentive."

"We should not be penalized by reduced federal funding because we were out there making a buck. I think there should be enough lead time and that they at least should draw the appropriate legal framework so we can continue to operate."

The Dial — a television magazine put together by WNET and four sister stations to carry display advertising — was one of the first income-generating PBS projects to run afoul of the existing legal framework.

Scarcely had The Dial hit the stands when Philip

Merrill, publisher of the Washingtonian, went to the FCC, the IRS and to court in an effort to suppress it on grounds that non-profit organizations cannot sell advertising.

The PBS stations won that one. The FCC and the IRS quickly rejected the complaint and recently a District of Columbia superior court judge dismissed the suit. But legal headaches remain and proposals and counterproposals still swarm on Capitol Hill.

Markatos said given half a chance to phase into the new role of breadwinner and given the legal option to do it, major producing PBS stations not only will survive, they will flourish. But he added, TV funds suddenly are cut — and they still could be — most of the smaller stations will go under.

"It would be a damn shame to lose these small stations," he said. "I think probably if you put them all together they make up a good part of the public television audience."

In addition to participation in the Dial, WNET has several enterprises — so far unchallenged — in operation. At a duplication facility in Ann Arbor, Mich., and a postproduction studio near Detroit, programs and commercials are dubbed for commercial stations and delivered via the Western Union satellite to which PBS has permanent access.

From New York, WNET is offering "teleconferencing" services, bounced off the same satellite, to firms in need of bringing their executives together without the need of airline tickets.

WNET even rents its Manhattan production studios out to the public when they are not in use.

"We're trying to make a buck," said Markatos. "We're learning a hell of a lot about how to work in the commercial world. It's the real world."

"I think there's a lot of potential in terms of what we can do. The mistake would be to leave things fuzzy — and they're certainly very fuzzy right now."

'Arts alliance' seeks strength-in-numbers

To Grossman, "the Grand Alliance" — linking financially squeezed PBS stations to equally squeezed organizations of the arts — is the only way any of the squeezed are going to survive now that federal funding is begin sharply reduced or eventually eliminated.

"We are in a very dangerous period now — no question," he said. "As the public sector financing is tightening down, the question is how to replace it and perhaps expand beyond it. We're seeing, at a point when the traditional source is changing, whole new opportunities arising in terms of new telecommunications efforts."

His proposed "Alliance" is designed to grab the opportunities before they fade away, one by one.

"The idea is to put together some natural allies," he said. "People who produce and distribute public programming are public television stations with the satellite system, the production capacity, the ability to market to special audiences, and with 2.5 million families who have contributed to members."

"Combine that group with those who have the material — the museums, the dance companies, the theater companies, art companies — all of whom also are struggling financially."

"We offer them a national box office that goes far beyond the concert halls and the theaters they're now limited to in terms of getting their revenues. The idea is to

Idaho PBS stations feeling crunch of state budget cuts

By LARRY SWISHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Idaho public television station managers are becoming veterans of government budget cutting and community fundraising.

Earlier this year the Legislature eliminated state funds for public TV except for $95,000 to maintain a microwave system. Two of the three stations were forced to reduce staff and broadcasting hours.

The stations then learned it would be illegal to offset the $1-million loss from their annual federal grants. Additional pay-offs, shortened broadcasts or, in one case, a shut-down may result later this year.

More bad news came last week when Congress reduced funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting by 25 percent starting in October 1982.

"I feel sometimes like I'm being surrounded," said Don Rogers, manager of KBGL-TV, channel 10, at Pocatello.

Unlike some large Public Broadcasting System stations, however, Idaho station managers do not resent federal restrictions on raising funds from the private sector and adamantly oppose running commercials.

"If I don't like the restrictions, maybe I ought to look to getting into a commercial operation," Jack Schaeffle, manager of channel 4, KATV-TV at Boise, said.

"They are good guidelines that will keep us from going overboard," said Rogers.

In fact, Rogers and Schaeffle pointed out two restrictions that were recently lifted.

They expect to benefit from a decision of the Federal Communications Commission allowing public television to show the company trademark of program underwriters. Later this month stations will no longer be required to show only the name at the beginning and end of a program.

"This gives better identification to the company," Rogers said. "I see no problem. It will help our underwriting effort."

Also, a restriction was eliminated on the number of days public TV stations can conduct fundraising on the air.

To combat funding cutbacks the Idaho stations have turned largely to community fundraising. They were successful enough to carry them through the coming year.

But in the future, the station managers pin their hopes on a change of heart by the Idaho Legislature, a study by a special task force of the State Board of Education, and a waiver of the prohibition against using federal funds to offset the state cuts.

Following the Legislature's action, the public rallied to the Pocatello and Boise stations by donating more money than ever before. KATV-TV at Moscow was harder hit by the loss of state funds because of the small size of its local community.

Rogers said KBGL would hold three televised fundraising and membership drives this year instead of the normal two. It also plans to hold an auction, seek more program underwriting by businesses and corporations, and stage non-televised benefits.

In Boise, KATV had raised all but $150,000 in private funds needed to keep the station going through next June, Schaeffle said. It has held an auction, plans increased underwriting, and may obtain commissions and grants to produce programs.

KATV-TV in Salt Lake City, which is broadcast locally on cable, receives about 30 percent of its funding from non-governmental sources, according to Larry Smith, business manager.

It has not had to reduce staff or programming and receives about $1 million in state funds.

Schaeffle said the Friends of Four would provide about 70 percent of KATV's budget in the coming six months.

In Pocatello, private funds rose from a quarter to half of KBGL's budget.

Rogers and Schaeffle said commercials would destroy the purpose of public television: He foresaw limited help from such money-making ventures as renting equipment and facilities.

"Although we're really hurting from the state and eventually the federal squeeze, we want to maintain the difference between us and commercial TV," Rogers said.

generate a new kind of television — an American pay television network.

Under Grossman's plan, subscribers would pay a monthly fee of $10 to $13 to receive via cable or "scrambled" satellite signal the sort of programming they have received for years free of charge.

Following pay boxoffice distribution, operas, dramas and other programs produced for the system then could be used to generate even more income through release to cassette or videotape distribution.

Grossman hopes to launch his alliance of fund-hungry allies in 1983. The PBS budget for which was slashed by $43 million in Congressional action last week. The "recession" action was deployed by public broadcasters as an erosion of the concept of two-year advanced funding designed to keep the system free of political pressure.

The Reagan administration had sought an additional recession of $43 million for fiscal 1982, but Congress rejected the bid. The fight over federal support for 1984 will be waged this summer, but public broadcasters are braced for the inevitable — the day when there will be no federal money at all to underwrite programming for the more than 45 million households now served on a weekly basis.

But cultural programming is not the whole of Grossman's dream where the alliance is concerned. He envisages a "daytime university of the air" as well — one in which viewers would study in their homes with the aid of video cassette recorders, possibly even for college credits.

"We would be using our distribution system through television to pump out these master classes and telecommunications which they can then take off and play at their own convenience," said Grossman.

"The development of the cassette recorder, which can take material off the air for replay later, is the key to success according to Grossman. Because video cassettes weren't available when public broadcasting was born, the original "University of the Air" concept failed.

"Broadcasting is a very hard medium to use as an educational tool, but it's a very good medium to use as a delivery tool," he said. "You still need teachers and you still need people to criticize and grade but now you can distribute these great classes by satellite and have them used by students (who can) alone and re-start it and replay it and review it and discuss it."

"It's the library of the future, television text books if you will."

"The job of putting together a "Grand Alliance" of such diverse and stubbornly independent partners as only the arts can produce is very like trying to build the United Nations from scratch, and Grossman has more than his share of skeptics within the public broadcasting sector.

Not long ago, when the federal budget axe was just beginning to loom over PBS, WNPT President John Jaylesin complained, "Not a day goes by that somebody doesn't write our obituary."

If that obituary already is in type, Beeton said, "the real loser is going to be the viewer" — and he saw a quarter of a century of creative effort going down the storm drain.

"I'll take a few years for people to realize that there's a need for another public telecommunications industry in fill the programming void left from existing commercial cable," he said.

"We'll have to build it all over again from scratch. And it took 25 years to get here."

'Kill and Kill Again' not as gory as title

By RICHARD FREEDMAN
Newhouse News Service

Despite its gory title, "Kill and Kill Again" — like all martial arts movies — is clean mayhem, as opposed to the pornographic violence of horror films.

In fact, nobody really gets killed at all except the villain, megalomaniacal Marok (Michael Mayer) — and he richly deserves it. He wants to take over the world with a "mind-control" serum he's extracted from kidnapped Nobel Prize-winning chemist Dr. Horatio Kane (John Bambamott).

The serum looks like blueberry Kool-Aid, and Marok's nut yats of the stuff on hand to send to Moscow and New York.

Opposing him is free-lance karate champ Steve Chase (James Ryan, who was in the earlier "Kill or Be Killed"), and Kane's sissome daughter, Kandy (former Miss World Anneliese Kriegl).

Dubious of Kandy's loyalty, and unwilling to go it alone, Steve recruits his old buddies Hotdog, Gorilla, The Fly and Gypsy Billy, before attacking Marok's neo-fascist satrapy of New Babylon, where the troops are brainwashed and the busty, wisecracking First Lady, Minerva (Marlee Scott-Wilson) had her hair dyed black raspberry to match her revealing costumes.

Early on, we know Steve is no one to fool with when he takes on a group of assassins while dressed in a tuxedo, and savages them without even getting his bow tie mussed. But it turns out to be a clip-on, which is surely cheating for so virtuous a master of the martial arts.

If you've seen one kung fu movie you've seen them all. Excruciating dialogue in a comic-strip plot is punctuated every so often by kicks, groans, slaps and chops as hero finally does in the villain.

"Kill and Kill Again" is no different, except that it boasts a sub-James Bond plot instead of the usual "wisdom of the Fast" slaptrap, and is entirely suitable for viewing by backward 10-year-olds.

Ansel Adams books a pleasure to read

By United Press International

"Expressions without doctrines," he writes, "my photographs are presented here as ends in themselves, images of the endless moments of the world."

"The Portfolios of Ansel Adams" is a lovely book. The advanced printing technology of laser-scanned, dusted separations allows Adams' original prints to be reproduced with aesthetic integrity, and then collected into a paperback edition at a reasonable price.

John Szarkowski's introduction is succinct and illuminating, placing Adams in a specific tradition of the craft and pointing out the differences between his work and that of younger photographers pursuing the same ambition. The portfolios are also personal. Adams pays homage to his mentors, thanks his friends and associates, reveals his technique and outlines his philosophical thought behind these 30 images created between 1932 and 1976.

Those close to photography and entranced by Adams' technical skill should be aware of "The Camera" by Ansel Adams, with the collaboration of Robert Baker (New York Graphic Society, $16.50). It is Book One of The New Ansel Adams Photography Series and carefully details Adams' approach with chapters on various camera, lenses and mechanical procedures that aid that secret process of artistic-sensitivity. Adams calls "visualization."

"Was someone asking to see the soul?" wonders Walt Whitman in his poem "Starting from Paumanok." He gives his answer: "See, your own shape and countenance, persons, substances, beings, the trees, the flowing rivers, the rocks and sands."

Ansel Adams selects Whitman's lines to introduce one of his seven portfolios — of photographs — that spanned 45 years of dedication to his art. A meticulous craftsman, Adams views the photographic negative as a composer's score and the completed print as its performance.

Born in San Francisco in 1902, he has emerged the undeniable master of the American landscape. His images lift the spirit into a serene realm of natural perfection so powerfully that they are almost nostalgic in their dream-like removal. Their titles read as poetic footnotes rather than captions: "Half Dome, Thunder Cloud," "Rushing Water, Merced River," "Branches in Snow."

Adams resents the notion that artists can be pigeonholed by the subjects they select. In his revealing introductions to these portfolios ("The Portfolios of Ansel Adams," introduction by John Szarkowski, New York Graphic Society, $16.50) he describes his work as "intuitive observations" or "the essences of light and space" or "the luminous juxtaposition of growing things."

Braun brothers dance contest starts June 19

TWIN FALLS — It's time again for all you cowboys and cowgirls to put on your foot-stompin' boots and grab your partners.

The Third Annual Braun Brothers Dance Contest will get underway Friday, June 19, with a dance at the Fiks Club in Twin Falls.

First place winners in the Twin Falls country swing dance contest will receive $100 cash. Both first and second-place winners will be eligible to compete in the state finals to be held July 25 in Stanley at the Mountain Village Saloon.

Prizes in the state contest include cash, a float trip down the main Salmon, an airplane ride through the Sawtooth Mountains, dinners at restaurants and T-shirts.

The Twin Falls dance will begin at 9 p.m. and the contest will begin at 11 p.m. Admission will be charged but there will be no extra cost for participating in the dance contest.

The following night, on June 20, a dance and contest will be held in Buhl in the Jaycee Hall.

Contest judges are Gary and Muzzie Braun and two other persons yet to be selected.

Gary Braun said about nine semi-final dance contests will be held around Idaho before the Stanley finals.

Doldrums of summer reruns, too

...hard act to follow

NEW YORK (UPI) — With network schedules well into the doldrums of summer reruns, rating points leveled off last week, leaving CBS in its usual first place position and moving NBC into second place, but with thinner margins than prevail when counterprogramming is in full swing.

CBS topped the week with a Nielsen score of 14.2, NBC edged out of the collar with 13.9, leaving ABC in third place with 13.6.

On the news side, margins were equally narrow. CBS won the week with a Nielsen rating of 10.8, NBC was second with 10.0 and ABC was third with 9.7.

Since Dan Rather took over the "CBS Evening News" from Walter Cronkite, the program's weekly Nielsen ratings average lost 1.1 points from the same period last year. What this means is that in the 12 weeks he has been in Walter's slip, Rather has lost about 850,000 homes. To put it in perspective, however, it should be noted that for the same period ABC's "World News Tonight" lost 78,000 homes and the "NBC Nightly News" lost about 540,000. The explanation, in part, is that last year at this time was a hot news period with the presidential campaigning in full swing and the Iranian crisis still unresolved.

CBS's "Dallas," born the phenomenon of video history: continued to be anything but phenomenal in its re-run cycle, posting only 13.9 on the Nielsen scale and commanding an audience share of only 28 per cent. J.R. and company were beaten out by Sunday Night's Broadway "Tony Awards" extravaganza, aired live by CBS, which clocked in with a Nielsen rating of 14.4 and a share of 25.

ABC's "20/20" news magazines hit the Top 10 for the second week in a row, placing ninth, right behind CBS's perennial winner "60 Minutes."

'American Pop' film a nightmare of decline

By RICHARD FREDMAN
Newhouse News Service

In "American Pop," Ralph Bakshi, the maverick animator whose "Fritz the Cat" won the distinction of being the first X-rated cartoon feature, has tackled no less exalted a subject than the American Dream.

It turns out to be more of a nightmare, though, as Bakshi symbolizes its decline and fall through four generations of popular musicians in the 20th century.

First is young Zalmie, who flees the Russia of pogroms for the New York of sweatshops in the 1880s; his mother dies in a fire like the notorious Triangle Shirtwaist fire, Zalmie grows up so entranced by the bustling musical world of vaudeville that he marries a stripper.

His ambition to become a singer is cut short by wounds he receives in World War I; the only singing he will get to do will be before a federal grand jury, testifying against his mobster friends who control the entertainment industry.

California he meets and impregnates a Kansas waitress, whom he abandons to write rock lyrics, sniff coke, and wallow in sterile self-pity.

Eventually he teams up with his son, Little Pete, a drug connection for acid-rock stars, who becomes a superstar himself. Ironically, this amoral drifter is the first in his family to achieve true popular success in a now totally corrupt music business.

The animation style in "American Pop" ranges from patches of the New York Ashcan School for the early 1900s to psychedelic splashes for the '60s and after. It makes a very clever accompaniment to the shifting musical styles, in a potted art-history way.

Yet ironically, Bakshi shares with Walt Disney — whose saccharine view of life he despises — an inability to animate human figures convincingly. Disney at least had Bambi and all those other cute animals to fall back on; Bakshi is self-confined to caricaturing humanity. As a result his Kansas waitress is every-bit as maudlin as Snow White.

In its way, too, "American Pop" is as pretentious as Bakshi's unsuccessful rendition of the "Lord of the Rings" saga. The new film is mercifully shorter, and its action is clearer. But it pretends to be saying a lot more about America than it really delivers: as social history it remains just what it is — a cartoon.

Unlike most cartoons, though, it uses animation to feed us vinegar instead of treacle. So sour and abrasive does its vision become as it approaches our own era, that one wishes at times Bakshi would even return to his "loose" Hobbits and complete the Tolkien trilogy he so grandiosely promised at the time he began it.

His son Bennie grows up in the glittering musical world of George Gershwin and Cole Porter, but before he can truly make his mark against such giants, he enlists in World War II.

In the movie's single most effective scene, he kicks open the door of an abandoned farmhouse and starts strumming on the battered upright he finds there. A wounded German soldier points his rifle at him. Bennie quickly segues from "As Time Goes By" to "I'll Be Home Again," but the Nazi shoots him anyway.

Now we are in the '50s, and Bennie's posthumous son Tony turns his back on the affluent conformity of the age to become a beatnik. On-the-road-to-

Country may have reached Elvis overdose

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter

HOLLYWOOD — Has the country overdosed on Elvis Presley nostalgia? It's possible. The most recent and the best of Presleymania, "This is Elvis," currently is playing theaters across-the-country to less-than-rampant enthusiasm.

In the four years since Presley's death, there has been a plethora of covey Elvis performers. TV movies based on his life and special record album releases. His old movies have been rerun ad infinitum on the tube.

It appears that the country is Elvised out.

Too bad, because "This is Elvis" is far and away the best depiction of Presley's life and times. It deals with the legendary singer on a personal basis, depicting his quirks, humor and grungy side as well as virtues.

The movie is the singer's definitive screen biography made with the cooperation of Col. Tom Parker — his life-long manager — the Presley Estate, his widow, Priscilla, RCA Records and such trusted friends as Joe Esposito.

Produced by Andrew Solt and Malcolm Leo, "This is Elvis" is equally divided between Elvis' singing appearances and his offscreen life — almost none of it fiction.

Probably the most exciting element of the film is the never-before-seen footage of Elvis backstage, at home and on-the-road, home-movie and out-takes from his concerts and TV shows.

"About an hour-and-a-half of the movie is composed of film on Elvis that no one has ever seen before," said producer Leo.

"We really get behind the scenes with Elvis. We see him with his guard down among his friends. Most of the stuff we found in his film vault in the basement of Graceland, his mansion in Memphis.

"We discovered 20 hours of material, including early appearances on TV shows, and the only copy of his TV appearance with Frank Sinatra.

"We have some wonderfully revealing scenes of Elvis' wedding, his involvement with karate, buying Graceland and backstage before and after personal appearances when he talks about the women in his life."

Leo and Solt culled through 65 hours of outtakes and television shows along with running all 33 Presley movies and three of his own TV specials. They reduced the mass of material to less than two hours of screen time.

"We had 200 hours of material," Leo said. "It was really tough deciding what to include and what to cut out. We had so much documentary footage, including his two years in the Army, we ended up with a full portrait."

There was, however, virtually nothing of Elvis' early life, the years prior to 1956 when he captured the national fancy with his hip-grinding style of belting out early rock 'n' roll hits.

The filmmakers traveled to Tupelo, Miss., Elvis' birthplace, to film him as a 10-year-old using child actor Paul Bonachea as "the pre-teen Elvis. Bonachea appears on screen for three or four minutes.

David Scott portrayed Elvis as a teen-ager for another five minutes or so.

Both young performers are amazing lookalikes for Presley.

"We took very little dramatic license," Leo said. "We had to provide our own footage of the loss of Elvis' mother and when he visited her in the hospital. The original footage of all that was lost in a flood."

"We did heighten some drama here and there because we wanted the picture to be just a little larger than life, as Elvis himself was."

Sitting beside Leo was Esposito, the Army buddy who became Elvis' closest friend and most trusted advisor. Esposito was never a member of the Memphis Mafia, the group of rednecks who became Presley's bodyguard-coterie.

"This picture is the best thing ever done on Elvis," Esposito said. "The producers hired me and Jerry Schilling as consultants. We don't try to conceal anything from the moviegoers."

"His drinking and his drugs are part of the Elvis legend and they are in the picture. So are the dark years when his career wasn't going so well. And we make it clear Elvis had a lot of girls. An awful lot of girls.

"There's some racy, randy footage with girls in the picture. It makes Elvis human and makes up for some of the other stuff that's been done on him that make Elvis look like an angel — which he wasn't."

"Of course, there wasn't time to go into some aspects of his life in detail. There was an intellectual side to Elvis along with everything else."

"For a while he was deeply into the religious philosophies of the world. He bought all the books he could find on various religions and read them carefully. He liked to discuss such things with me."

"He was terribly shy and lonely most of his life, even after his great success. But he knew what he wanted and how to get it. Elvis could charm anyone he wanted to: When he turned on the charm, no one could say 'no' to him."

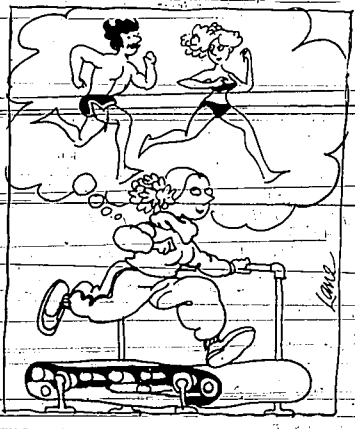

"I guess you could say when Elvis died at the age of 42 he was still a boy at heart. Maybe it was his tragedy that he never grew up. Then again, maybe that isn't a tragedy after all."

Principal—Andy Gibb romance still sizzles

Q. Has Victoria Principal's romance with Andy Gibb cooled off already, as is rumored? — C.R.
A. No way—Victoria, who's 31, and Andy, eight years her junior, are still very much a terrific item. In fact, everything in Principal's life these days seems red hot. Not only is Victoria a regular on "Dallas," she also is a successful TV pitchperson for a shampoo line. On top of that, consumer and fashion magazines seem to be falling over one another citing Victoria as the most popular, liberated and beautiful TV actress. The romance with Andy remains the sweet icing on all that cake.

Q. Since he's so cute, can we expect to see Willie Aames of TV's "Eight Is Enough" co-starring with Brooke Shields in any of her movies? They'd make a perfect couple. — E.H.
A. While professionally isn't quite up to making movies with Brooke, he is — in the eyes of one Hollywood producer — just right for the new picture "Paradise," a sort of "Blue Lagoon" sequel. Rather than the Shields-Chris Atkins pubescent combination of the original, this one features Willie and 14-year-old magazine model Phoebe Cates. "Paradise" is already being pushed as a sexy teenage romance designed to collect patrons to view the scantily-clad duo alone in paradise.

Q. We've heard so much about

Gossip

By Robin Adams Sloan

Grace Kelly's daughter Princess Caroline but what about the other two children and how do all three get along with each other? — C.A.
A. Caroline is the most difficult of the three. She's quite snobbish and is moody and capricious. Prince Albert, 21, and just graduated from Amherst College, is quiet and reserved but well liked by everyone, including his fellow students. He and his younger sister Stephanie, 15, who is the family charmer, are very close and spend as much time as they can together, ignoring Caroline. Princess Grace herself has said to friends, "Caroline is impossible but the other two are a joy."

Q. It was nice to learn via your column that Burt Reynolds will get yet another chance to expand his range and stretch his acting muscles

In his new movie, "Paternity." Will this help the flick to become a sure-fire hit? — K.H.
A. Ask us in a few months, after the film is released. Truth is, every time Burt attempts to shake his flip image to go serious, his films simply make less money. Incredibly, even though Burt's subdued acting was hailed in "Starting Over" and even "Rough Cut," these films just didn't measure up to the more boisterous 'n' holler characterizations his fans seem to relish.

Q. Did you believe Ingrid Bergman when she said she'd prefer living the quiet, retired life in London to acting onstage and in films? — D.H.
A. After reading Ingrid's recent autobiography, — Ingrid Bergman: My Story, — and sitting through a fascinating interview with the 63-

WILLIAM AAMES

INGRID BERGMAN
one more role?

VICTORIA PRINCIPAL
Andy's her hot item year-old actress, we believed Bergman when she said she was ready to retire and live quietly. Even though she divorced her third husband, Swedish producer Lars Schmidt, four years ago and now lives alone, Ingrid dotes on her children and genuinely enjoys the simple life. However, there may still be one more role for Bergman. Negotiations are underway for her to star in a movie biography of Israel's Golda Meir. The picture, to be shot in Israel with full governmental cooperation, will require three actresses to play the life role — with Ingrid, the producers anxiously hope, as the mature "Golda."

SNOOPY COLA: A British soft drink company has just pulled off the coup of the year. The A.G. Barr company has gotten permission from Charles Schulz to market a Snoopy Cola. Charlie Brown Lemonade and Woodstock Apple drink. Schulz has merchandised his cartoon characters for thousands of products, but never as the name of a drink. The negotiations were carried on for months in secrecy as the company feared that someone else might get the idea. Schulz also insisted on approving the soft drinks themselves, insisting for instance that the cola have no saccharin in it and very little caffeine. Don't look for any of those Peanuts refreshers over here — the firm only has rights in the United Kingdom.

Q. Is Bill Murray as exuberant as the comical image he projects in his film and TV appearances? — D.S.
A. It all depends on his mood. One morning recently, Bill, wearing scruffy dungarees and appearing rather spaced-out, strolled into a Manhattan coffee shop where he sat down alone at the counter. When a customer recognized him and began talking, Murray remained cool and unresponsive. However, as soon as he spotted a construction worker, Bill went into reverse and animatedly struck up a friendly chat. Obviously, it's very much Bill who calls the conversational shots.

NICE NIPSEY: Nipsey Russell and a group of friends recently were in a Manhattan deli, laughing it up about a half hour over coffee and sandwiches. Though they seemed totally oblivious to those seated nearby, Nipsey stopped at the next table when they were leaving, introduced himself, and said, "I know we haven't been too boisterous."

Charlton Heston

Actor assists Reagan in reviewing federal funding of arts

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter

HOLLYWOOD — Actors have come a long way from the historical ragtag vagabonds of medieval times who performed for crusts of bread.

Not was it all that long ago — early 20th century — when decent folk hid their daughters from actors, most of whom paid in advance at the door.

Doubleless, some actors still lower their statuses out of hotel windows to escape paying their bills. And not a few still seduce farmers' daughters.

But there's an actor in the White House and another is the ambassador to Mexico. You may be sure neither is told to use the servants' entrance.

Captains of industry no longer write off actors as frayed-cuff scamps. Not with Burt Reynolds raking in $5-million-per-movie and Clint Eastwood accumulating a "fortune" that would impress a flock of geese.

Along that line is one of the most respected of actors, Charlton Heston. He has gone to work — at no salary — for President Ronald Reagan, whom he succeeded as president of the Screen Actors Guild a couple of decades ago.

Heston and Reagan have much in common. Both were once liberals. Both have become conservatives. Both have wielded considerable clout in Hollywood through the years.

But Heston has no plans to succeed Reagan in his new office.

Last month, Heston — was appointed chairman for the arts of a Presidential task force on the arts and humanities. President Hannah Grey of the University of Chicago was appointed chairman for the humanities.

The purpose of the task force is to investigate disbursement of federal funds for the arts and humanities, to eliminate waste and duplication.

Heston long has been a workhorse for the arts, involved with the actors guild, and as president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, president of the American Film Institute and of the Center Theater Group.

Said Heston of his new appointment, "It's felt that federal funds for the arts might be disbursed more efficiently because the Congress recently voted across-the-board budget cuts affecting the endowments."

"If we're going to operate as effectively as we have in the past, we must do it more efficiently because we'll be working with less money."

"When I served on the Council for the Arts in the '70s, the total budget was about $13.20 million. Last fiscal year it had grown to $132 million. Congress has cut it by roughly half this year."

"There certainly is duplication between the arts and humanities endowments, both of which fund film and museum programs and others. The programs are desirable but it seems one or the other should take over individual programs.

"Perhaps there is a possibility that both endowments could be turned into one. It would avoid duplications. In some cases programs of the arts and humanities are also funded by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare."

"Maybe we will decide whether 'recreational art' is appropriate for the endowment, given our relatively small budget. By recreational art I mean such as street dancing festivals whose function is primarily social."

"Maybe the department of education, which is far larger and has a huge budget — one of the largest slices of the federal pie, is better equipped financially and philosophically to take over the responsibility in this area."

Heston does not put endowments for the arts ahead of national defense, health, the fuel crisis and other federal problems.

Power pop bands shaped by leaders of singer-songwriter era

Beatles influenced sound of upcoming groups

By GEORGE KANZLER
Newhouse News Service

NEW YORK — The three groups considered here would never have existed if it had not been for the Beatles.

Call them new wave, or power pop, or simply rock bands — they not only conform to the conventions of the performer-songwriter groups exemplified by the Beatles and their contemporaries, but they also are notaverse to stealing a few familiar licks bodily from the Beatles oeuvre.

And there is more than a hint of the adonoidal Liverpool canol delivery in all three groups, although only one is from England.

Despite the similarities to the Beatle tradition, the three groups are quite diverse in the ways they approach the rock tradition, and each group extracts something from it and refines it to its own ends. They are:

• "A Woman Got the Power" (The A's (Arista Records) This Philadelphia-area group has some outrageous fun on their second album, taking satiric potshots at everything from Phil Spector production to the Doobie Brothers, as well as exploding some of the overblown musical trails of Bruce Springsteen.

Sometimes it's hard to tell if their intentions are parody, pastiche or simply an attempt to cash in on somebody else's success formula. I prefer to think it's the exuberance of high spirits confronting musical traditions and styles with honest talent and irreverence.

The title song is a send-up of the Doobie Brothers, right down to the string synthesizers, double lead vocals, dance beat and title take-off on a Doobie hit: "A Wise Man's Got the Power." But its done with such good humor it comes off more as affectionate tribute than parody.

Other songs are close to neo-Beatles power-pop, but always with something a little askew, as in the jaunty ironic "Working Man" with its sprightly vocal chorus of "Work! Work! Work!"

• "Concrete" Nine Nine Nine (Polydor Records) — This British quartet rings subtle changes on the power-pop formula, playing clean guitar licks and brightly danceable new wave rhythms over songs with sly twists and easily-digested hooks. Basically, the 999 sound is well-crafted pop — but it's done with an an and sophistication that does not detract from the freshness of the sound. Also, the lead vocalists have enough sense to vary their deliveries.

• "Look Out!" 26-20 (Portrait Records) — Here's one of those second albums that says, "We proved we could do love songs on our first album, now here's something really heavy." Unfortunately this power pop band is from Los Angeles, and they're not the first L.A. band to discover angst, despair and a dissolute American dream. And their terror-and-fashonable decadence is too ironically glib in the musical context; neo-Beatle and Beach Boy power pop.

Carol Burnett sets reunion

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Carol Burnett, old gang from her weekly TV variety series, will hold a reunion for a two-hour special titled "Eunice," based on the old show's segments of the Higgins clan.

Burnett will star in the title role supported by Harvey Korman as her husband, Ed Higgins, and Vicki Lawrence as Mother Harper. Korman will stage and direct the CBS special. Betty White will recreate her recurring role of sister Ellen and Ken Berry will co-star as their brother Philip.

In all, 32 separate episodes in the lives of the wacky Southern family were shown during the course of the defunct "Carol Burnett Show."

New York still directors' favorite

By RICHARD FREEDMAN
Newhouse News Service

NEW YORK — This may not be the cleanest, safest or prettiest city in the world, but most movie directors and cinematographers agree it's the most photogenic. They only argue about whether it looks better in color or black and white.

Recently two very different movies — a thriller and a romantic comedy — were being shot in New York City. The thriller is "A Stranger in Waiting," about a psychopath (Rip Torn) who keeps television newscaster Kate Mulgrew and a small girl captive in the catacombs beneath Grand Central Station.

The director, Sean Cunningham, showed his skill at horror movies by making "Friday the 13th" for $500,000. It has since grossed $50 million and spawned an inferior, but so far equally successful sequel, "Friday the 13th — Part II."

The romantic comedy is "A Little Sex," about a young couple (Tim Matheson and Kate Capshaw) who are perfectly happy living together until they decide to get married. He's a director of television commercials; she's a musician with stage fright. His work introduces him to many willing starlets whom he must learn to turn down, now that he's married.

The set for "A Stranger in Waiting" is an abandoned post office in the West Village. It is filling in for the bowels of Grand Central Station — where some shooting also took place — and is replete with appropriately spooky by being festooned with cobwebs made of rubber cement.

"This will be terrifying," says Cunningham. "Rip Torn is playing the worst person in the world. He has no redeeming features. All he shares with the rest of us is that his heart beats — once in a while. "It'll be different from 'Friday the 13th," though. In that, we followed all the rules. But I don't think you can make the same picture over again. We're building a new roller-coaster.

Movies

"The questions we ask are: When does an audience say, 'That's stupid — I've seen it and just turn-off.' Is it scary? How can we make it scarier? "What I try to do is relate audiences to those fears we all had as kids. Rain, lightning, thunder — you just know somebody is hiding under the bed. Well, what if there really is someone there?"

Does Cunningham agree with some critics that the new breed of horror movies exploits women? "New? Back in 1933 King Kong didn't kidnap a guy named Bruce to take up the Empire State Building," he says, laughing off the accusation. "He kidnapped Fay Wray."

"Seriously, we're not cynical and we're not pretentious. Gore isn't 'characters' and 'blood' isn't 'story-telling. I think sheer Grand Guignol horror is boring and disgusting — it must be related to people and situations."

"Audiences have changed. We're an emotionally jaded television generation, and when we pay five bucks to go to a movie we want to feel something. We say to the movie, 'Make me laugh, make me cry, scare me!' The last thing we want is to be uplifted."

Further downtown, and an emotional world apart, "A Little Sex" is being filmed in Battery Park. It's receiving some competition from a horde of schoolchildren embarking on a cruise to the Statue of Liberty — a Marine squad in training, and a helicopter that keeps hovering overhead.

In this scene the hero, played by Tim Matheson of "Animal House" and "1941," is trying to shoot a television commercial for "Common Sense" deodorant.

Clad in tennis shorts and an aquamarine rugby shirt, leggy blonde Melinda Culea keeps springing up to the camera to announce, "I like athletic men, as long as they don't smell like a locker room." The helicopter noise and an insistently tooting tugboat ruin take after take, and although it's a rather chilly spring day, Miss Culea is working up quite a sweat.

But writer and co-producer Robert De Laurentis says he was born and raised in Atlantic City, N.J., says he still likes filming in New York.

Despite all the interruptions of location shooting in a great city, De Laurentis says they've had little real trouble filming in such varied spots as Central Park Zoo, Bergdorf Goodman's, Tiffany's and the Citicorp Building.

"People in New York love watching movies being made," he says. "We only had a bit of trouble with an inebriated individual on the Upper East Side of all places, who started making rude remarks to Kate Capshaw."

"Our only worry is about the title, 'A Little Sex.' Audiences may not realize it's a romantic comedy. But it's the first feature film for Mary Tyler Moore Enterprises, and I think most people know that's a guarantee it will be both tasteful and funny."

'History' offensive, trite but if you like Brooks....

By RICHARD FREEDMAN
Newhouse News Service

A taste for Mel Brooks, like a taste for a Capuchin chocolate-covered ant, is a highly specialized one.

Brows as lofty as the late Kenneth Tynan's concurred with the masses who flocked to Brooks' "Blazing Saddles" and "Young Frankenstein," thinking him one of the funniest men alive.

Others can't stand him at any price. There must be more of the former than the latter around, because the modestly titled "History of the World — Part I" is the diminutive comedy-ant's most lavish movie to date, nothing short of a Brooks Tour of Humanity from 20 million years ago through the French Revolution.

And at the end of the film a sequel is threatened, featuring such modern-day laff riots as "Hitler on Ice" and "Jews in Space."

Narrated in his plummy tones by Gene Wilder, the film is a pastiche of the soul-stirring strains of Strauss' "2001" music, "Also Sprach Zarathustra," to show us chief caveman Sid Caesar leading his fellow primates in a breast-beating contest which ends with everyone falling down exhausted.

So much for prehistory: It's not as funny as the recent "Caveman," but then it doesn't last as long either. Equally brief is the Old Testament, with Brooks (who also wrote, directed, and produced the film) as Moses looking like a department store Santa Claus and having trouble juggling around the Ten Commandments.

"History" really gets going with the Roman Empire, ruled by Dom DeLuise as the grossest, and Madeline Kahn as the shrillest, Romans of them all. DeLuise is Emperor Nero, Kahn is his lascivious consort Nympha, and together they do a fine send-up of the BBC's "I, Claudius" television series.

Also aboard are Playboys Hugh Hefner, scouting for centerfold talent among the Vestal Virgins, Mel Brooks as Comicus, hoping to play the original Caesar's Palace, and elited Broadway dancer Gregory Hines ("Euble," "Sophisticated Ladies") filling in as Josephus, a role originally intended for Richard Pryor.

Time out for the Last Supper, with John Hurt in a cameo role as Jesus, posing with his Apostles for Leonardo da Vinci's group portrait while a harried waiter tries to find out if they want separate checks.

Like much else in "History of the World — Part I," the humor here is ribald and irreverent, and may offend the Moral Majority.

Even more offensive is a Spanish Inquisition skit in which Brooks plays Torquemada leading torturers and victims alike in a song-and-dance routine while a bevy of nuns do an Esther Williams water ballet.

Bad taste, in fact, is what "History" is all about. On to the French Revolution, with Cloris Leachman as a hazy Madame de Fargee, or of Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities." Harvey Korman as the epicene Count de Monet (the pun is on the film's general level), and Brooks again as the doomed Louis XVI, who pinches at the court beauties at Versailles while superfluously proclaiming, "It's good to be the king," before the tumblers come to get him.

Like the Monty Python movies about the historical past — or at least Hollywood's vulgar treatment of it — "History" depends heavily on sexual and scatological double entendres and on the humor of anachronism.

His view of mankind's murderous foibles — through the ages — is appropriately comically blunt — but aesthetically rather numbing in its dependence on dirty puns, sight gags and Las Vegas one-liners.

Real history is much funnier.

Movie news in brief

FDR documentary — HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The 100th anniversary of Franklin D. Roosevelt's birth, Jan. 30, 1982, will be observed with a special two-hour documentary to be produced by Centennial Productions.

The star-studded entertainment tribute, "FDR Remembered," will be telecast on the 100th anniversary date next year, according to producer Peter Kuyler.

Working with the producer will be FDR National Centennial Committee members Benjamin Cohen, Thomas Corcoran, Jim Rowe, Archibald MacLeish, Arthur Miller and Studs Terkel.

Jackson signed — HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Kate Jackson, one of the original "Charlie's Angels," has signed with MGM to co-star with world-famous operatic tenor Luciano Pavarotti in the romantic comedy, "Yes, Giorgio."

Miss Jackson will play an accomplished American physician pitted against her reluctant patient, a famous Italian opera star.

"Yes, Giorgio" will begin filming on locations in Best New York, San Francisco and Italy this month. Miss Jackson recently completed starring in "Making Love" and "Dirty Tricks."

Academy cutback — HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The television Academy's Emmy awards, which usually produce larger parades of winners before the cameras than any other awards show, will cut back on the number of on-camera winners this year. The academy board has voted to hand out a maximum of 23 Emmys during the 33rd annual awards program Sept. 13. The previous on-air awards minimum was 33 in 1979.

A spokesman for the TV academy said it hoped the reduction would enable the telecast to stay within its scheduled 2 1/2 hours. Disney cassettes — HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Probably the most wanted of unreleased videocassettes in the vaults of motion picture studios are Walt Disney's great feature-length cartoons, "Snow White," "Bambi," "Pinocchio," "Cinderella," et al.

Author attacks mineral shortage predictions

By JAMES WARREN
© 1981 Chicago Sun-Times

When a few Harris-weed-clad professors breeched the subject, perhaps only lawing undergraduates noted. But the idea of an imminent scarcity of raw materials has since left the classroom and is now part of both public and government orthodoxy.

Is it correct? Julian Simon, a University of Illinois economist, says no in a "challenge to conventional wisdom" that is the cover story of the June Atlantic.

Simon underlines shortcomings in the methods of technological forecasting, but, more importantly, maintains that there is sufficient evidence to suggest there are vast amounts of all resources "contrary to the gloom stories that dominate the daily newspapers." One think tank even concludes that none of the world's 12 principal metals is likely to be exhausted "by a date pertinent to contemporary decisions."

Simon mixes such investigation with a mere, possibly foolish, hunch: that "human ingenuity" is limitless and will ultimately retrieve all the minerals we need. Still, he's strong when he shows how conflicting claims about relative scarcity are tied to the self-interest of various groups, be they oil well owners, international oil firms like Exxon, nuclear plant builders like Westinghouse or labor unions.

Each party can be found "fabricating reasons for the government to control the price of every source of energy except the open-air profit from, and to finance research in our domain at the public expense. The most persuasive reason we can offer is that the supplies of the other energy sources will soon run out, which makes our sort of energy the most deserving of support. And we tie our arguments to expected economic and population growth, which will make the other fuels run out faster and make the need for ours that much greater."

Esquire (June). "What Do Women Really Think of Men's Bodies?" is a cover tale with the following heart-stopping revelations: Women prefer men who wear clothes, are taller than they, have a few muscles, aren't fat, perhaps have a beard and a little chest hair, have "earring" and strong hands, don't necessarily have monster organs and are nice guys, too. This could well be inspiration for a "Barbara Walters Special" in which our intrepid reporter turns to Britt Ekland and whispers, "Bwif, what do you weally, weally think about men's sssss?" There's much better stuff in stories on Boys' Life magazine coping with changing times, a redneck Tennessee county, a bright and self-abusing former British pop star (Marianne Faithfull) and a fine profile by Pete Dexter of Norman MacLean, an uncommon, revered University of Chicago literature professor who finds truth on a Montana lake that's the source, Dexter contends, of a magnificent, little known

MacLean novel, "A-River Runs Through It."

Town & Country (June). The monthly whose readers are impervious to inflation profiles women executives who are "Hollywood's new movie moguls." Oh-so-high fashion photos of each woman, including Sherry Lansing, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, are dominated by cosmically chic gowns and, at best, a low-watt bulb for lighting. A guide to the "best private schools" in the West includes one joint in Steamboat Springs, Colo., where classes end at 1 p.m. so the kids can ski and where, after the slush of spring, the school packs up and heads to a foreign country for about six weeks.

QUOTE OF THE MONTH. Susan Sheehan's marvelous, if mellow New Yorker series on a mental patient included this snippet about the patient's interview by a Taiwanese-born psychiatrist upon one of many hospital admissions: "More than one person in the chart room at the time of Miss Frumkin's screening who later happened to read Dr. Sun's mental status report was surprised that he believed he had failed to elicit any delusions or auditory hallucinations from Miss Frumkin, but, as Dr. Sun later acknowledged, he didn't recognize the names Mary Poppins, Don Knotts, Peter Lawford, and Lou Costello, and he hadn't understood Miss Frumkin had said anything about—making movies with these people, whoever they were."

Freehand? tops in no-holds-barred autobiographies

By United Press International

Freehand, by Lily Harmon, (Simon and Schuster, $15.95).

Lily is a love-and-I-love-"Freehand" autobiographer. A dynamic bohemian, yet instinctively a lady, Lily Harmon shows that the life of an artist is, indeed, as fabulous and difficult as anyone can imagine.

Yet for all the wonderful encounters with celebrities and the sophisticated worlds of Paris in the Twenties and New York anytime, Lily Harmon lets us see the hurts and the disappointments which helped her artistic development.

But she doesn't dwell on life's shadows. Instead, she presents a full spectrum of experiences in color and in good humor. Her zest for life carries the reader along on a marvelous adventure, a meeting, pretend magic and real magic, from Hollywood in the Thirties to her beloved grandmother at Coney Island in her 70s, and we are with her dear dazzling Lily every step of the way.

—F. Only regret, that the photographs included in this volume don't also show some of Lily Harmon's paintings. Her autobiography deals very much with her work as a painter, and I am fascinated by her descriptions of the creative process as she experiences it.

Of course, the fundamental reality of "Freehand" is that Lily Harmon became an artist in an era and a culture where the artist was a Lily Harmon did a lot of things nice girls don't do, thank God, and she is all the more a heroine because of the risks she took and the mistakes she made. "Freehand" is a deep and delightful journey into the consciousness of an artist who truly loves life.

"A Sentimental Education," by Joyce Carol Oates, (E.P. Dutton, $11.95).

Profligate, talented writers usually fall into two groups.

First, those who end up writing mediocre works, because they feel they must satisfy their editors, readers, or their own need for constant recognition. And then, there are those who consider their work "good literature" with an amazing ease.

Fortunately, Joyce Carol Oates belongs to the second group.

"A Sentimental Education," a carefully-chosen collection of short stories and one novella, is a case in point.

The themes represent a variety of explorations of human emotions through a divorced woman fighting loneliness, a professor who wavers between peace and violence, a man obsessed with death, a poet's past, an adolescent becoming a woman.

Most characters are drawn from well-educated, middle- to upper-class intellectuals, very much within Ms. Oates' own personal experience. Here, she excels in portraying the erratic pattern of her lives.

There is always the element of surprise which suggests a touch of O'Henry stories, but if a comparison is to be made, one must conclude that if Anais Nin recreated the language of eroticism, Joyce Carol Oates has recreated the language of feeling.

Park's Success With Herbs, by Gertrude H. Foster and Helen L. Louden (George W. Park Seed Co., Inc., P.O. Box 31, Greenwood, S.C. 29647 Catalogue No. P90010 $9.95) This fine book by a mother-daughter team stops short of perfection only because it lacks directions for growing herbs indoors.

Loyalty of good friends comes from displaying feelings about alliance

GENERAL TENDENCIES: An excellent day and evening for you to rely more upon your prophetic insight. Advancement can now be gained by looking into activities that have not been part of your life.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Your success can be increased if you seek the guidance of experience persons. Exercise caution in travel.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You know exactly how to make a better impression on the one you love, so follow through on such. Don't neglect duties.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Formulate a plan whereby you can ascertain what your true position is with associates. Cooperate more with co-workers.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Take care of routine tasks that need doing instead of procrastinating. Take time to improve your health and appearance.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) If you study the details concerning entertainment plans you have, you can be successful with them later. Use common sense.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Gain the views of family members and then make your home more comfortable. Happiness can be yours for the asking.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You are able to entertain friends today after your work is done and have a delightful time. Plan your activities wisely.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You are in need of more income now and will be inspired just how to get it. Consult an expert before making any decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Plan for tomorrow's activity during spare time today. Attending a social affair tonight will be to your advantage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Coordinate new ideas with the plans you have in mind. Help good friends who in turn can be of service to you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) If you show good friends that you value the alliance, you will gain their loyalty. Show interest in their lives.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Put aside personal matters and handle civic affairs in a most efficient way. A quiet and restful evening is best for you.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will have many good ideas developing early in life. It is wise to plan a fine education that will include the study of foreign language and varying philosophies. There is likely to be much travel in foreign countries in this chart.

What's what

Hair plays major role in determining beauty

If you ask men what physical characteristics make a woman beautiful, the majority will put "long hair" on the list. Studies at the University of Southern California indicate that. If you ask women the same question, according to these studies, most say something about "blonde hair."

It was the common belief for many centuries that beards were born without form and had to be licked into shape by their mothers.

Radio, Moscow in bygone years repeatedly broadcast the claim that Siberia gets more sunny days than Italy.

THE PEPPYS NAME

Q. How is the last name of that historic Englishman Samuel Pepys supposed to be pronounced?
A. PEP-iss is how the surviving members of the family say it, but just about everybody else says Peeps.

Q. What's the difference between an ox and a steer?
A. Age. If the steer survives the butcher until age 4, it's an ox. You don't see many oxen having fun. No practical reason to spare them from the slaughterhouse.

Q. What makes brooks babble?
A. Bumbling lubbies. They collapse. Their walls fall in, splashing their surfaces together.

Q. How many chicks do two ostriches raise in a year?
A. Maybe 15 or 16.

SILVER COINS

Here's to Terence Davey—clink!—an honorable fisherman of New England. One fine day out on the salt, he snagged a chest, which, lo, contained numerous old silver coins. He reported this to police. A coroner's hearing awarded him the $2,800 of treasure. But federal customs and excise agents said no—they'd hold the coins for a year, then sell them, and keep two-thirds of the profit. Mr. Davey took his chest of silver back out to sea and threw it overboard.

Review of two classic albums

Beatles are back and special oldies resurface

By GEORGE KANZLER
Newhouse News Service

NEW YORK — With the pop charts featuring one single that imitates a score of Beatle song excerpts, and another that's a tribute by the surviving three ex-Beatles to John Lennon, not to mention Lennon's own final recordings, the Beatles are very much with us in 1981.

That being the case, a couple of albums have recently surfaced that bring diverse perspectives to the Beatles' music. One is a Beatles song book by an eminent jazz singer, the other an album featuring 10 cuts by an earlier incarnation of the Beatles — before Ringo Starr — in 1962.

Songs of the Beatles (Atlantic Records)
This was long considered a lost Sarah Vaughan album, because it was never released after being recorded in the 1970s. It has finally surfaced, and it turns out to be less a jazz album than a pop-soul setting for Beatles songs and Vaughan's fabulous voice.

On "And I Love Him," Sarah reaches down into her lower range to bring up a trembling version of the title tune, following it quickly with a teasing little scat riff.

"Eleanor Rigby" and "Fool on the Hill" are both given lucid, straight readings with the Vaughan voice gracing every nuance of melody. A lightly swinging bossa nova beat makes "Something" a very jazzy thing indeed.

The second side ends with three ballads that demonstrate the subtle command of the ballad form in Vaughan's languorous treatment: "Here, There and Everywhere," "The Long and Winding Road" and "Yesterday." Her a cappella beginning on the last is spine-tinglingly lovely.

Dawn of the Silver Beatles (PAC Records)

These are recordings by the Silver Beatles, who were John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison (all later Beatles) and drummer Pete Best. Made "circa 1962," they are rough and ready recordings strong on cover material of American rock and rockabilly.

There are two originals by Lennon-McCartney here, neither one very distinguished, but both interesting since they never surfaced later. And of the eight covers here, only two ever cropped up on later Beatles albums. So what we have here is eight out of 10 "new" Beatles recordings.

The Silver Beatles had a very simple style, and they tended to sound like Britishers copying American records with a lot more enthusiasm than genuine technique.

It's all good time music, by a group that was only too human then, but made up for it in legends later.

Conductor keeps BBC connection

Soviets apparently have change of heart

By ROBIN STRINGER
Daily Telegraph, London

LONDON — The Soviet authorities, in an apparent sudden change of heart, have agreed that Gennadi Rozhdestvensky should continue his association with the BBC Symphony Orchestra when his contract as chief conductor expires in September.

Under a new agreement between Goskonzert, the Soviet artists agency, and the BBC, Rozhdestvensky will conduct 20 concerts in the year beginning in October.

He will also join John Pritchard, the chief conductor-elect of the orchestra, on a tour of Australia and Hong Kong in the spring of 1982.

The BBC is "more than delighted" with the new arrangement in the light of the Soviet authorities' previous refusal to allow Rozhdestvensky to continue as chief conductor and refusal to allow him to conduct the orchestra on its recent visit to China.

Welcoming the agreement, Bill Rington, the orchestra's general manager, said Wednesday that Rozhdestvensky would be continuing his policy of adventurous program planning, which has made him such an ideal conductor of the orchestra.

"When I made the announcement to the orchestra at the end of the final concert of our 50th anniversary tour of the Far East, from which we have just returned, the whole orchestra cheered."

Former Prime Minister Sir Harold Wilson, who in his capacity as president of the Great Britain-USSR Association, had written to President Leonid Brezhnev expressing disappointment at the earlier Soviet refusal to allow Rozhdestvensky to continue at the BBC. Wednesday wrote again to express his delight at the new arrangement.

Rozhdestvensky, 50, became the BBC Symphony's chief conductor in 1976. He was subjected to a bitter Stalinist-style attack in the Soviet press shortly before taking up the appointment and was subsequently sniped at by cultural hard-liners.

The turnaround in the Soviet attitude appeared to come last month when a member of the Soviet Politburo called Rozhdestvensky to explain why he could not go to China and at the same time tell him that he had been awarded the Order of the Red Banner of Labor on the occasion of his 50th birthday.

The high honor was to mark the conductor's "merits in the field of Soviet music," according to the Soviet news agency, Tass.

Rozhdestvensky, who has just given 11 concerts with the BBC Symphony in Japan and Korea, is next due to conduct the orchestra at the opening of the summer season Prom concerts on July 17. Later this month he is due to give a piano recital with his wife, Victoria Pestrikova, in Peter Maxwell Davies's St. Magnus Festival in the Orkney Islands.

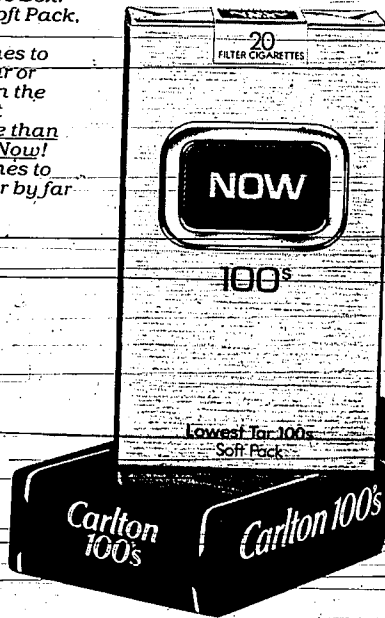

If you smoke Carlton 100's because you think they're lowest in tar, you're in for a little shock.

Carlton claims to be lowest in tar. And in fact, Carlton and Now share the distinction of being the lowest 80s Box. And the lowest 85s Soft Pack, regular or menthol.

But when it comes to 100s Soft Pack, regular or menthol, you'll note in the chart on the right that Carlton contains more than twice as much tar as Now!

And when it comes to 100s Box, Now is lower by far than Carlton. In fact, Now Box 100s is lower than any other 100mm cigarette anywhere.

There's no question about it. Now is the Ultra Low-est Tar™ brand.

And if that's what you'd like in a 100s cigarette, there's no question about what brand you should be smoking.

NUMBERS DON'T LIE.
NOW 100s ARE LOWER THAN
CARLTON 100s.

	100s soft pack regular	100s soft pack menthol	100s box
NOW	2mg	2mg	Less than 0.01mg
CARLTON	5mg	5mg	1mg

All tar numbers are av. per cigarette by FTC method.

3 KTLC employees request investigation

By STEVE LIPSON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Three former KTLC employees have asked the U.S. Labor Department to investigate the station.

In letters mailed to the department's Boise office last week, Robert Miller, Laura Hendrix-Branch and Jack Chapman accused KTLC of failing to pay required overtime and failing to reimburse employees for expenses.

The three advertising salespeople resigned last month, because of what they called personal and philosophical differences with Dick Ryall, KTLC station manager. They are now selling ads for rival station KLIX.

If their request leads to an investigation, and if KTLC is found to have violated any pay laws, the station would be required to pay back wages to them, plus any other employees who were underpaid during the last two years.

Ryall, said he was not concerned about a possible investigation of KTLC. A Labor Department investigation "is something that happens on a regular basis to all businesses," he said. "We've never had any problem."

In Boise, Bert Arias, a Labor Department Wage and Hour Division compliance officer, confirmed receiving the complaints about KTLC. He said the letters were forwarded to the department's regional office in Portland where a decision will be made whether to launch an investigation.

James Skolaut, the department's area director in Portland, said he is not permitted to say if a particular employer is under investigation.

However, people who file a complaint against an employer are informed within about a week (which would be sometime next week in this case) if their complaint will lead to an investigation, he said.

The complaint by the three former employees are part of a series of jobs traded by the station and its former employees during the last month.

Shortly after they resigned, Miller and Hendrix-Branch received letters warning them KTLC would take legal action to prevent them from joining KLIX.

They had agreed in their employment contracts with KTLC not to work for another radio station within 50 miles of Twin Falls for six months after leaving the station.

However, such contract clauses are not always upheld by the courts and KTLC has taken no further action to prevent Miller and Hendrix-Branch from working at KLIX.

Miller and Hendrix-Branch also filed claims with state officials asking for about $450 in wages they said KTLC owes them. In addition, Miller is preparing to fight for continued commissions from KTLC even though he no longer works there.

Health department wants 6% hike

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — South Central Health Department representatives are asking Twin Falls County for a 6 percent funding increase.

In a presentation before the Twin Falls Board of County Commissioners Thursday, health department officials outlined their proposed $1,278,900 budget for fiscal year 1981-1982, which calls for a $159,563 contribution from Twin Falls County.

The funding request reflects a $9,000 increase over Twin Falls County's allotment to the health department in 1980.

County officials did not increase their share of funding for the agency last year, citing frozen property revenues as mandated by the Legislature.

County commissioners responded to the 1981-1982 budget request by saying they would delay a decision until they have more detailed budget information.

Director Gerald V. Hurst acknowledged the budget for the eight-county health agency would be about $90,000 short, saying the deficit is due to an unfunded 7 percent salary increase approved by the Legislature.

The agency plans on receiving a 5 percent across-the-board increase from six other Magic Valley counties which last year increased their contribution to the health department by 4 percent. Besides Twin Falls County, Lincoln County also did not increase its contribution to the department last year, citing the same budget restraints.

The eight counties are being asked to provide a total of $433,800 for the department with another $279,900 expected from the state, $62,500 collected from fees and $412,500 generated through service contracts.

Options the agency may consider in balancing the budget include picking up additional contracts, increasing fees or employee layoffs, Hurst said.

Hurst said the counties could end up paying more medical indigent bills in the future if those preventative programs are reduced.

Without making a commitment toward 1982 funding, Commissioner Merle Leonard indicated the county could face severe budget limitations beginning with 1983, noting federal Payment in Lieu of Taxes are due to be cut by nearly 60 percent.

The county relies on those funds for nearly 25 percent of its general operating budget.

Some water is being diverted, but plenty more is flowing over Shoshone Falls

Bureau tries to put brake on flood

Snake starting to overflow

on Page A8

BURLEY — The Bureau of Reclamation is trying to put the brakes on the Snake River floodwaters by keeping Shoshone Falls open.

Don Tracy, Minidoka project superintendent, said the bureau was diverting water from the Snake River for irrigation, but it was also allowing excess water caused by Monday's rain to flow over.

"We've been letting some water through Shoshone Falls," he said, "so when (floodwater from the Rexburg area) gets to American Falls, the flooding would stop. But there still would be some high water at American Falls," Tracy said.

"Twin Falls isn't going to notice any of the flooding other than the fact that there is some water going over Shoshone Falls," Tracy said.

Normally, most of the water going over the falls is diverted for irrigation purposes in nearby valleys.

"The valleys did not receive as much rain and needed the irrigation, which also took pressure off the river," he said.

Thursday, there was 22,500 cubic feet per second flowing over American Falls, about 90 miles northeast of Twin Falls, Tracy said.

At Milner Dam, about 20 miles east of Twin Falls, there was about 13,600 cubic feet per second passing over Tracy said. That means the bureau was diverting about 9,000 cubic feet per second.

Heavy rains hit the upper Snake River areas Monday, overflowing already-full reservoirs and flooding some roadways and ranchlands in western Wyoming and eastern Idaho. Tracy inspected the flood damage from the air Thursday afternoon, flying from Boise, south of Rexburg, back to Burley.

"We saw quite a bit of flooding on the north fork and around the bridge at Rexburg where highway 88 crosses the north fork," he said.

The flood waters hit a peak in that area around 1 a.m. Thursday at 10,000 cubic feet per second, he said. By Thursday afternoon, the water at Rexburg was flowing at around 9,000 cubic feet per second.

There was some minor flooding near Mann, southwest of Rexburg, Thursday afternoon, Tracy said, and the water there was expected to peak by midnight.

The heavy runoff is also forcing Idaho Power Company to let excess water flow over its dams.

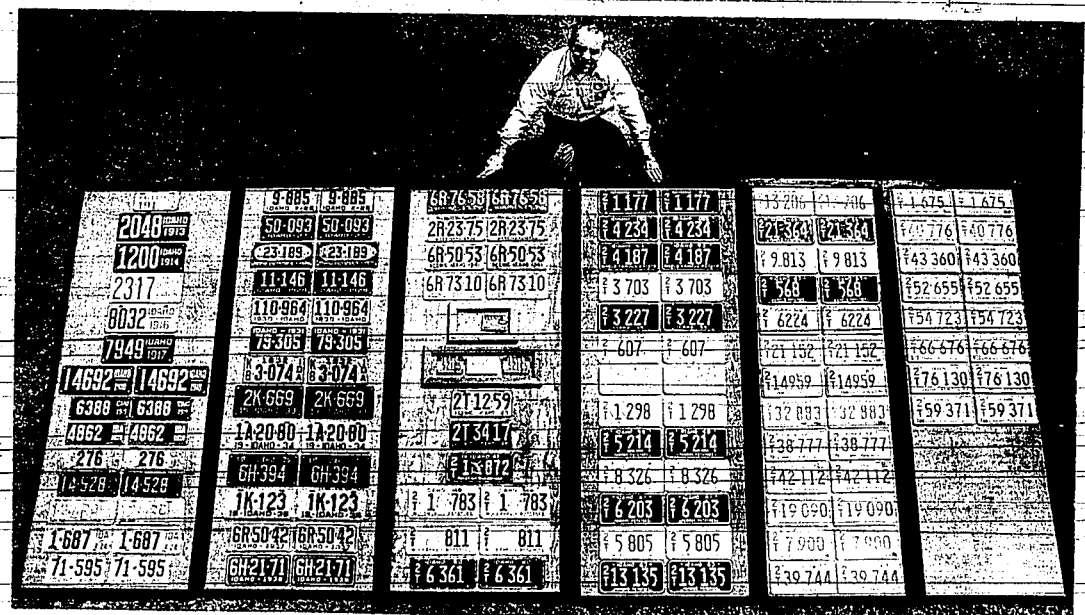

"We are releasing some water to try to keep the Brownlee Reservoir as full as possible," Bob Brown, new director for IPC, said, "so if the runoff drops we will still have enough water to generate power."

"According to a company newsletter, the reservoirs above the Brownlee up to Jackson Lake were at 99.1 percent of capacity."

"We are simply handling the inflows and passing them down the river," Jim Collingwood, of the IPC operation department, said. "If we don't get a large amount of precipitation, the inflows will recede and we'll be back to a normal summertime operation."

Collingwood said it was hard to estimate how much extra water IPC was passing through its system since amounts varied daily.

Brown said IPC was using some of the excess water to generate electricity for sale out-of-state, but the newsletter said the market is slow because other northwest utilities also have surplus water.

Phillip Cooper's collection of Idaho license plates spans nearly 70 years but he laments Idaho's lack of imagination in plate design since 1968

Collector Cooper says Idaho's recent plates just 'blah'

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — The greatest gift Idaho could give to Phillip Loyal Cooper would be to spice up the state's license plates.

Even a change from green-on-white plates to white-on-green plates would look fantastic to this Kimberly resident, who for six years has avidly collected license plates.

Cooper, 43, has what he believes is the best collection of Idaho license plates in the state. His collection features an Idaho plate (or slacker) from each of the nearly 70 years licenses have been issued. And until the 1950s, the plates displayed a rainbow of colors.

He has the first plate ever issued by the state, a white-on-blue item pressed in 1913. Before then, cities sometimes required licenses, and he has an extremely rare plate issued by Payette.

To Cooper, these plates represent Idaho's history. The 1940 plates announce "50 years of statehood." In 1947, the tag was "Vacation Wonderland," illustrated by an airborne skier.

The Idaho slapper made its first appearance in 1928 with an embossed outline of a bear. It reappeared, in living color and topped with a pat of butter, in 1948.

But since 1956, when "Famous Potatoes" became Idaho's license plate slogan, the state has been stuck on green and white variations. Since 1968, it's stayed with green on white.

For Cooper, who has thousands of license plates from all over the continent, this has been an aesthetic loss. No other state has been as stodgy as Idaho about its license plates, he said.

He points to one wall of his garage, filled with license plates from all 50 states, the American territories and Canada. They feature a profusion of colors, slogans, symbols and illustrations.

"Alaska has a pretty plate," Cooper said, gesturing at an example with a picture of a majestic Kodiak bear. "Now, there's Mississippi," pointing to a plate graced with a blooming flower which placed first in a 1977 national license plate contest. "Every year, Indiana has a new plate," he observed, enviously.

"But old blah Idaho. I can't believe it," he grumbled, shaking his head at his set of Idaho's post-1968 series, their monotony broken only by different stickers.

Cooper, an Intermountain Gas employee and a 20-year Kimberly resident, became interested in collecting license plates as an extension of his hobby of restoring old cars.

In his first three months of collecting, he rapidly found most of Idaho's license plates, but many were little more than masses of rust. He began to "look for quality" Idaho license plates in addition to plates from other states.

He says he "lucked" onto the 1913 Idaho plate, which is rated the 13th rarest plate in the U.S. The rarest plate is the 1921 Alaskan plate. The second rarest is the 1912 Mississippi plate.

Cooper's more unique plates are displayed in his den but he has hundreds of others stashed in boxes in his garage and home. A motorcycle license plate collection, missing only Rhode Island, is stored in one of his file cabinets. A framed collection of miniature plates hangs in the hallway.

His oldest plate is a 1908 sample from Massachusetts, the first state to fax cars by requiring license plates. "We have to blame them for it," Cooper added. He also has a 1964 "I" Idaho plate, and a governor's "O" plate from New Jersey.

License plates, like other collectibles, have their "vintages," priced accordingly. Common plates may cost a few dollars, hard-to-find plates may cost $25 to $50 and really rare plates, like a 1922 Hawaiian, can cost several thousand dollars.

Ponderosa sold again

BURLEY — The Ponderosa Inn at Burley was sold at a sheriff's sale for the second time in five years.

Floyd Anglin, a stockholder in a Nevada corporation that previously owned the motel, lounge and coffee shop, purchased it Wednesday from Minidoka County Sheriff Ray Jarvis, who was empowered to conduct such a sale, for $2,600.

The inn is assessed on Minidoka County tax rolls at a value of $1,037,018. However, James Annett, Anglin's lawyer, said a mortgage of between $2 million and $3 million must be paid by the new owner.

Annett said Anglin was one of "many stockholders" in the Superior Systems, a corporation licensed in Nevada, but will now own the property exclusively with his wife, Anglin declined to tell reporters who attended the sale how many stockholders were involved in the company.

The sale was called to satisfy an outstanding debt of $2,275 for labor and services performed by Superior Refrigeration of Twin Falls. Anglin paid the debt but requested that the sale proceed as scheduled.

Annett purchased the property at another sheriff's sale in the spring of 1980 on behalf of Superior Systems. At least one other suit for non-payment of a bill is pending against the motel.

Deadline nearing for tax payments

TWIN FALLS — The deadline is nearing for the second half of 1980 Real Property and Mobile Home taxes.

Twin Falls County Treasurer Juanita Stettler said payments have been coming in rather slow, but approximately $1.9 million outstanding of the total 1980 real tax charge of $9.5 million.

Of the amount due, $77,582 will be paid by public utility. Approximately $22,000 remains-out on the mobile home taxes of a total charge of $128,582.

With the June 20 deadline falling on Saturday this year, the office will be open for collection on Monday, June 22.

"The tax books will be closed by Idaho law for balancing and auditing after the June 22 deadline, until July 27. Taxpayers who miss the deadline face a 2 percent penalty and 12 percent interest charge."

Payments may be made at the Treasurer's office at the Courthouse from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, or by mailing to Box 88-000 in a postmark no later than midnight Monday, June 22.

Both sides work separately to break Minidoka impasse

RUPERT—The Minidoka school board and teachers association are now working independently to solve the impasse in contract talks.

George MacDonald, president of the teachers association, said that a six-member ad hoc committee consisting of three school board members and three teacher representatives met last week and adjourned without settling another meeting.

"Until one side, the other, or both are ready to do something, we've agreed to work separately. There doesn't seem to be any rush," MacDonald, a member of the ad hoc committee, said.

The committee was set up to work out differences on a contract clause which would make bargaining agreements part of the permanent teacher contract.

The board wants that clause, proposed by the teachers, to be deleted because it contends the clause illegally binds future school boards to decisions made in previous negotiations.

"It's a matter of taking an all-encompassing statement and reducing it to particulars. It's nailing a finding the right words," MacDonald said.

Negotiations officially ended May 1, and an impasse was declared. Federal Mediator Tom Curdie was called in from Salt Lake City and met once with the negotiating teams. The meeting made little progress.

But MacDonald is confident now that Curdie and board negotiator Gordon Waford from Pocatello have left the talks, some progress may be made.

"The idea is to genuinely resolve the issues," he said. "It is far better to sit down with three people on each side, all local people genuinely interested in what happens. We never should have called in the outside people."

Waford said that until the ad hoc committee's recommendations were approved by both the teachers and school board, "we wanted to keep it strictly local."

When the two sides agree on contract language, Waford said, he and Curdie would step back into the talks. "We're not going to reach agreement on anything else without resolving the language," Waford said, "but they probably will reach a settlement in Minidoka County."

Teacher pay increase and fringe benefits negotiations also have yet to be resolved, but neither side has established a timetable to end talks. However, teacher negotiator Desmond Welch said earlier that he hoped the contract clause issue could be resolved by the end of July.

The teachers originally asked for a cost-of-living pay increase near the 12 percent national level, but Welch said they may take less.

Dog licenses selling by thousands

TWIN FALLS—About 4,000 dog licenses will have been sold when a city-wide licensing campaign ends Saturday, according to campaign coordinator Barbara Phelps.

During the campaign period, which began last Friday, dog owners can obtain 50-cent licenses valid until a dog changes owners or dies. The fee ordinarily is $1.

Five hundred Boy Scouts and 4-H members are selling the specially-priced licenses door-to-door. Licenses also are sold during business hours at Twin Falls City Hall and will be available at Blue Lakes and Lynwood mail, the Hound Pound and K Mart from 3 to 7 p.m. today and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday.

Phelps said the estimated 4,000 requests for licenses during the campaign compares to the sale of fewer than 50 licenses during a recent 12-month period.

Hamburger or spaceship?

Mashelle Atherton of Twin Falls looks like a pilot in some Martin hamburger spaceship as she and her brother Roger play on the playground equipment at Sawtooth Elementary School. Both Athertons say they would rather be in school with their friends than on summer vacation.

Commission approves subdivision of 5 land parcels; uses new rule

TWIN FALLS—Twin Falls County Planning and Zoning Commission members approved five requests Thursday for divisions of agriculturally zoned land in parcels less than 20 acres.

Each of the requests involved land deemed to be non-productive and therefore eligible for splits by a review committee made up of zoning board and county officials.

Essentially, the use of the review committee and a critique of potential "divisions" might have on surrounding areas marked the first time such measures were used. The zoning board approved a policy last month to consider requests based on recommendation of the review committee in conjunction with an amendment to the county comprehensive land use plan spelling out procedures for dividing parcels below 20 acres.

County zoning laws restrict divisions of land less than 20 acres in agricultural areas.

The Twin Falls County Board of County Commissioners has yet to ratify the proposed amendment but approval is anticipated.

The approved land division requests were made by:

• Archie Malone of Jerome on behalf of his daughter, Debbie Reinko, for permission to split a two-acre parcel located four miles north of Curry.

• Daniel Park of Buhi who sought permission to divide one acre from his 10-acre parcel located two miles north of Buhi.

• Chuck Woodland of Twin Falls for authority to divide eight acres of non-productive land from a 20-acre parcel located 10 miles southwest of Twin Falls.

• Virgil Thompson of Buhi who wanted to divide two acres from his 15-acre parcel, located four miles northwest of Buhi.

• Frank Arana of Buhi who sought to divide one acre from a five-acre parcel, located 1 1/2 miles west of Buhi.

Collector

Cooper gets most of his plates through trades and purchases from other license plate collectors at swap meets. Some are the days when one could search through junk yards for antique plates.

Cooper belongs to two national license plate collection clubs. One, the Automobile License Plate Collection Association, has about 2,000 members including eight from Idaho. Cooper's heard of a New York member who has a plate for every year of every state except for that rare 1921 Alaskan.

The high prices paid for rare plates has bred some license plate fraud. Cooper admits with some chagrin he's been "burned" when he purchased plates altered to match a rare vintage.

Restoring rusted plates correctly can enhance their value but is a delicate process. Cooper researches the exact colors needed—a necessity for older plates covered with rust. He sandblasts the plate, adds a primer coat and re-paints the numbers and background fresh.

But a continuing source of disappointment to Cooper is Idaho's lack of license plate imagination.

In 1976, an unusual year, Idaho issued three different stickers and Cooper acquired all three.

That's a poor substitute for the bright colors of New Mexico's Land of Enchantment or the bears of Alaska.

TWIN FALLS—Twin Falls Police are investigating a report that a teenage girl was attacked Thursday while traveling home from work.

Police said the girl finished work at a drive-in restaurant on Blue Lakes Boulevard North and was headed home at about 3:30 a.m. when an unspecified number of persons forced her from her vehicle and apparently attacked her. The girl was taken to Magic Valley Memorial Hospital where she was treated for bruises.

Police declined to release details of the incident Thursday.

NEW YORK (UPI) — The last-ditch baseball negotiations continued into Friday morning with no indication of whether the talks could avert a strike.

Negotiators for both the clubowners and players entered the latest round of discussions at 8 p.m. EDT and four hours later, no announcement had been made.

In Chicago, Reggie Jackson, the New York Yankees player representative, said he had talked to Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players Association, after the Yankees' game with the White Sox.

"I don't look good," Jackson said. "Representatives for the players and owners appeared pessimistic about the prospect of reaching an agreement before they began the evening session."

"I think we're gonna have a busy night," said Ray Grebey, director of the Player Relations Committee. "It looks like a very long night. They better come up with a better idea or we'll have a strike."

When asked if he thought the prospect for a strike was stronger than last year at this stage in the bargaining, Grebey replied, "Yes indeed, absolutely. We made some proposals this afternoon that the players have characterized as insignificant in the press."

Miller said, "No one side can do it alone."

In Washington, a spokesman for the National Labor Relations Board said late Thursday that no decision will be made before Friday on whether to appeal Wednesday's court decision which pushed the spectre of a player strike into the fore.

The sides met earlier in the day and broke off at 3 p.m. EDT.

"There has been no forward movement... it has significance," Miller said after the 3 p.m. break. "By that I mean something that provides the basis, the possibility, of being worked into a settlement."

Miller, asked whether he felt a strike was unavoidable, said: "My real gut feeling is that it's very likely."

Miller said no games would be played Friday unless agreement was reached on the free agent compensation issue. He said all games Thursday night would be played to completion regardless of the status of the negotiations.

Miller said negotiations could continue until 2:30 p.m. edt Friday, when the Chicago Cubs are scheduled to host the San Diego Padres.

Joe Nickro of the Houston Astros and Rusty Staub of the New York Mets, club player representatives, were gloomy.

"They owners are stuck on their version of the compensation clause," said Nickro. "There was no movement at all. I'm not looking to playing baseball tomorrow. All the members of our club have reservations to go home — or to wherever they please."

"There was no progress," said Staub. "They're getting nowhere."

Federal mediator Kenneth Moffett said he thought progress still might be made by limiting the number of negotiators in the room at the same time to five.

Although he expressed pleasure at the owners' newest ideas, Moffett said: "I would characterize the situation as not looking very good at all."

Miller said Grebey appeared upset that several players were present in the negotiation room during the morning meeting. The players voluntarily remained in an adjoining room during the afternoon talks.

Players on hand at the meeting site in a midtown hotel included Nickro, Staub, Don Sutton of Houston and four members of the Cincinnati team — Ron Oster, Junior Kennedy, Bill Bonham and George Foster.

The talks appeared headed into a long night just as they did a year ago when Miller and Grebey reached an agreement at about 5 a.m. edt, which pigeon-holed the compensation issue and avoided a strike. The issue arose last February when the owners implemented the compensation clause, according to the agreement reached at the table.

That same agreement, however, gave the players the right to strike on May 29 and that date was set. The May 29 date was extended when the National Labor Relations Board supported Miller's efforts to make the owners open their books to prove their financial problems.

The NLRB's petition was dismissed Wednesday by Federal Judge Henry F. Werker, who held that the issue should be resolved at the bargaining table.

A spokesman for the NLRB said late Thursday no decision will be made before Friday on whether to appeal the baseball court decision to a higher federal court.

The owners want compensation for players lost through free agency, and they have implemented a plan that would compensate a team losing a free agent with either the fifth or 10th best player on the signing club's roster. For the past few years, teams losing free agents were compensated with college draft choices.

Foiled sacrifice

Hagler risks title against Antuofermo

BOSTON (UPI) — A less-strident but doggedly determined Marvin Hagler, aiming to avenge his only boxing blemish in the last five years, defends his middleweight title Saturday night against former champion Vito Antuofermo.

Hagler, the only undisputed champion in boxing, will make his second defense in six months. The two fought to a controversial draw in November 1979 in Las Vegas with then-champion Antuofermo retaining the crown. After the fight, the referee, who was not scoring, congratulated Hagler on his apparent win.

Antuofermo subsequently lost the title to England's Alan Minter, who in turn lost it to Hagler last September. Hagler, unbeaten since March 1976, won his first defense with an 11-round TKO over Venezuela's Fulgencio Obelmejias in January.

Hagler, whose pre-fight words are often as devastating as his punches, has been anxiously awaiting his rematch with Antuofermo. But the bruising southpaw, who is 31-2-2 with 42 knockouts, has approached this bout with less bombast than usual.

"I'm not thinking destruction or destroy," said Hagler, repeating the two watchwords for his Obelmejias bout. "All I'm thinking is Vito the Mosquito. This is the fight I've been looking for since Las Vegas. I feel I won that fight and the only way I can prove I'm right is to go out and win this one."

Antuofermo, who is 46-5-2 with 19 knockouts, is known as a bleeder and recently underwent corrective surgery to strengthen the bones under his eyebrows. Hagler's entourage already has warned state boxing officials to be on the guard for a possible illegal blood-stopping compound which the Antuofermo camp has been rumored to use.

While many don't expect Antuofermo to last the full 15 rounds, he has diverted attention from his underdog status by complaining about the site and the referee. The Italian-born, Brooklyn-raised boxer is convinced he can beat Hagler but he'd rather have the fight somewhere other than Boston Garden.

"When I was champion, I was willing to meet challengers in neutral sites," Antuofermo said. "If he wants to fight me here, this is a place where I can feel comfortable. I've also got something to prove and I'll do it."

Antuofermo's camp also is displeased with the selection of Dave Pearl of Nevada as referee, though neither the champion nor challenger has fought any bouts officiated by Pearl.

Pearl, who has refereed 16 title bouts, has a reputation for safety, which could cause problems if Antuofermo's eyebrows start to bleed. Pearl also frowns on the swarming inside style which is one of the challenger's trademarks.

Lead shifts spice high school rodeo

By MIKE PRATER
Times-News writer

FILER — Standings in the Sixth District High School Rodeo tightened after the conclusion of the third go-around Wednesday night.

Several top performances vaulted competitors into the top four after falling behind in the standings and on several occasions, leads changed hands.

All the events, except saddle bronc and bull riding, will have one more go-around before the district champions and state berths are decided Saturday night. Bull riding and saddle bronc first go-arounds will end tonight.

Second go-around action starts tonight at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds at 8. The queen's presentation will be at 7:45.

After falling out of contention in a preliminary round at Rupert, Terry DeLoe of Declo vaulted into contention in steer wrestling with the first go-around win. The defending all-around champion downed his steer in 6:07, the top time thus far, to move into third place in the standings with 34 points.

Hobie Peterson, however, clung to a lead of three points over Kenny Tuma of Twin Falls. Peterson, who clocked a 14:25 third go-around time for third place, enters the final go-around with 41 points.

Milco's Susan Carney moved into the third position of the goat tying with a 11:42 winning time. The victory, which netted the 16-year-old cowgirl 10 points in the all-around standings, moved Carney to within seven points of leader Tanna Bradford, also of Milco.

In the middle bronc, the stock got the best of the cowboys. After the first five cowboys picked up no times, Eric Kasel received a 62 for the only successful ride of the night. The win moved Kasel into the third place of all-around standings, but far out of first place. Declo's Junior Bryan has the event locked up, being the only cowboy to complete all rides.

Shelly Kendall moved to within one point of the goat tying with a win. The Milco cowgirl, who stands second in the all-around standings, chased, roped her goat in 4:76 to pick up 10 points.

Frank Tuma of Painesville and Marlene Ward are locked in a tie at 27 heading into the final go-around.

Bonnie Simper added to her pole bending lead, although the Minico rider placed fourth Thursday. Toni Janssen of Buhl moved into fourth place of the event's all-around standings with a second place effort.

In the team roping, the standings took a complete shuffle although the leaders remained untouched. Kenny Tuma of Twin Falls and Ellen Tingstrom of Filer continue to lead the event, but four other teams moved into striking distance with high third go-around scores.

Brothers Todd and Troy Asher of Declo won the go-around with an 11:31, moving them into a second place with Tim VanOrman of Twin Falls and Peterson with 33 points. Tuma and Tingstrom claim 35 points.

The calf roping, bull riding and barrel racing were still being decided late Thursday night.

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Al Davis fired a charge of "falsehood" Thursday at a National Football League attorney.

He also gave testimony intended to prove other club owners conspired against him in secret to destroy his attempt to move the Oakland Raiders to a more profitable venue in Los Angeles.

In his third day on the witness stand at the trial of antitrust charges against the NFL, Davis related how the other league members excluded him from so-called "privileged meetings" of the NFL executive committee in 1980 at Dallas and at Palm Springs, Calif.

The members voted against the Raiders' projected move to Los Angeles and then, without his prior knowledge, had an injunction suit filed against the proposed transfer of the Oakland franchise in Alameda Superior Court at Oakland.

"A subsequent Superior Court injunction threw the issue into federal court for the current antitrust trial and forced the Raiders to withdraw some employees who had set up temporary offices near the L.A. Coliseum and were taking season ticket orders in Los Angeles."

During questioning by Raider attorney Joseph Alioto, Davis was asked about a statement made in court by NFL attorney Patrick Lynch to the effect that the Raiders "trumped up" the purported oral contract on permission to move without a vote.

Davis stated, "It's a falsehood."

Alioto returned to the subject later and again Davis said it was a falsehood.

Davis committed himself and the club to the southward trek when he signed a memorandum of agreement with the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission that provided a $16-17 million package for the Raiders including $4 million to move club offices and for moving expenses for some club employees. The deal included improvements to the Coliseum, a practice field and construction of luxury boxes from which the Raiders would get large revenue.

The Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors agreed to provide a $2 million down payment to Davis and Supervisor Kenneth Hahn had planned to present a check for him at that amount at the NFL annual meeting in Palm Springs March 3.

Davis charged, however, that NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle and the other club owners agreed in secret to file the injunction action in Oakland to destroy the whole plan.

Davis has insisted he had league approval to move without asking for a vote. He said he was given an oral contract to that effect at an October 1978 meeting in Chicago when he changed his vote from "no" to "abstain" on a motion to amend Rule 4.3 of the NFL bylaws. The rule had required unanimous consent of club owners for any team to transfer its franchise out of its territory but the amendment reduced the requirement to three-fourths of the owners.

Davis has said his attorney and even some league attorneys held the rule was not defensible in the Sherman Antitrust.

During his testimony, Davis also told of a deteriorating relationship with the Oakland-Coliseum Commission which renewed, he said, on "a very generous offer" of a new contract made by Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson and Cornell Maier, head of Kaiser Aluminum.

Easley, Ferrin take first taste of pro life today

TWIN FALLS — There's one thing you have to say about the New York Yankees.

"They move when they make a decision." The Yankees selected three College of Southern Idaho baseball players in this week's free agent and secondary draft and already scout Jerry Zimmerman has contacted all three. In addition, he'll be in Magic Valley today and probably Saturday trying to come to terms with the local players, Trent Ferrin of Rupert and Logan Easley of Twin Falls.

It is quite a switch from the methods of so many other teams who have selected players from this area in the draft. In some cases, like the Pittsburgh Pirates last year, no contact was ever made. In others, there was a brief, cut-letter informing the individual he'd been drafted, supposedly a responsibility demanded by baseball bylaws — but no other contact and no attempt to reach any type of agreement was ever made.

Both Ferrin and Easley are evidencing considerable interest in signing.

In fact, Thursday night Easley already had his itinerary for joining the Yankee farm club in Painesville, Ky., pretty well mapped out.

"I talked to Zimmerman today on the phone and he said they'd like to assign me to, probably Trent Painesville," Easley said. "I guess I'd leave here about the 21st."

"No," he answered a question. "We haven't talked about any money or any contract terms. But, yes, I guess you'd say I'm pretty close to signing."

Painesville is a combination of class and a league, which, if the old rules under which the erstwhile Magic Valley Cowboys played, would indicate that players with "limited service" (up to five years) would be allowed in the league. Rookie leagues are restricted to players with no more than two seasons of professional experience.

"I guess it's a little better league than a straight rookie league," Easley said.

The other Golden Eagle drafted was infielder/catcher John Hughes of Salt Lake City. His selection raised another odd happening in the usually baffling world of professional athletics.

Hughes played first base throughout his high school career and first season at CSI. But Coach Jim Walker, believing he has "the bat" to make it professionally, switched him to catcher this spring. That position — other than pitcher — is the one professional (and college) teams constantly seek the most help. Good catchers are hardly a dime a dozen like good fielding infielders.

Several scouts indicated that the switch of Hughes to catcher had indeed enhanced the youngster's chances of playing professionally. But in the end, none of those drafted him. Hughes was drafted last year but that was before he began catching.

Yet when the Yankees drafted him in the sixth round of the secondary phase, they listed him as an infielder. Zimmerman has only scouted this area this year and hence hadn't seen Hughes play anything other than catcher. So that completed the circle.

"I think," said Coach Jim Walker Wednesday before flying off to Canada for a week of coaching-instructor-for-a-semester team, "the Yankees just liked his bat."

When Zimmerman talked to Easley Thursday, he asked how he liked throwing to Hughes and if he'd like to see Hughes show up at Painesville, too. Easley assured him he would. However, Easley got the impression the Yankees were thinking mostly Florida Rookie League for Hughes.

Just what the Yankees are saying to Hughes isn't known because he currently is playing semi-pro baseball in Alaska.

Romance clouds the immediate picture for Ferrin, who plans on being wed June 27.

Ferrin hasn't yet personally talked with Zimmerman since the draft although the scout has set up a meeting with Trent and his family tonight at the family home in Rupert.

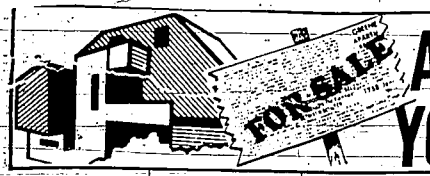

"He called my folks and that's how I found out he's coming down tomorrow," Ferrin said. "I told my folks the Yankees were interested in me and we'd talk over everything so far as signing goes."

But prior to the draft, Ferrin said he'd discussed the June 27 wedding with Zimmerman.

"He just asked me when I could be ready to go," Trent said. "He asked if I could report (to any assigned team) by the first."

That will be one of the major items on the negotiations table, evidently, because Trent said while he could do it, he wasn't sure he wanted to spend his honeymoon on a three-day cross country tour to join a baseball team.

But that doesn't say he doesn't want to play baseball either.

BRIDGE

Oswald Jacoby and Alan Sontag

Origins of Contract Bridge

additional trick. His slam bonuses are unchanged from the original and his penalties have been reduced to the current figures.

Mike was ahead of his time. He invented the Vanderbilt Club convention and all successful modern club conventions have drawn largely from it.

He gave the Vanderbilt Cup which is still the most important American tournament and won it in 1932 with von Zedwitz, his favorite partner.

He won the world league team in 1935 with Oswald Jacoby. Here is one of his plays that helped produce the win.

We don't think much of South's jump to three trump but that singleton ace, but the bid almost worked.

Oswald Jacoby opened his fourth-best club. He then played from dummy and Mike, who is normally a slow player, outdid himself. Forty-five years later, Jacoby still remembers that huddle.

Finally, Mike produced the eight of clubs and when Jacoby got in with his diamond stopper he led a second club and the defense cashed four club tricks and the ace of spades.

Mike's play had everything to gain and little to lose. South needed the ace of clubs for his no trump bid, so if South held ace-deuce he would be sure of two club tricks on any play.

Contract bridge was invented by Harold S. (Mike) Vanderbilt in 1925. He thought of the vulnerable feature and invented a scoring table that with a few unimportant changes is still in effect. His notrump score was 35 per trick. Today it is 40 for the first trick and 30 for each additional trick. His slam bonuses are unchanged from the original and his penalties have been reduced to the current figures.

'Wedding Day' another weird to test run

By BOB WISEHART
Newhouse News Service

"Wedding Day" is one of the most lurid ideas I've ever run into. This, of course, means it will be a big hit and go on forever.

Here is the essence of "Wedding Day," and I hope you didn't just finish a meal:

Next Monday through Friday at 11:30 a.m. on NBC — a show will appear in which lovebirds actually get married on the air.

This will happen only after 30 minutes of excess that should make Liberace seem to be the last word in good taste. Prior to the ceremony, we will get a bridal shower and a bachelor party. After the ceremony, there'll be a gala (detractable word) reception.

"Wedding Day" art director John Mula says: "Imagine a circle on a revolving stand. One half will house the setting for the marriage, with flowers, pews, an aisle and an abundance of flowers and hanging greenery."

"As the ceremony comes to a conclusion and the couple kisses, the stage will begin to slowly turn. As the couple walks toward the rear, a door will open in the center divider, and the bride and groom will enter the area designated for the reception."

Just imagine. "Wedding Day" comes equipped with co-hosts. They are Huell Howser, whoever he is (the network louts him as a "noted newsmen," along with Mary Ann Mobley, full-time Mississippi belle, Miss America of 1959 and wife of talk-show host Gary Collins.

NBC is only trying out "Wedding Day" next week, the first daytime pilot I can remember. If it works, come September it will have a permanent place on the daytime schedule.

Remember how long the country put up with "Queen For A Day."

"There may be some people who think it's corny," says Mobley. "But I think that's a compliment."

"What about someone who thinks it's disgusting, tasteless and ridiculous?"

"Do you think someone might think that?" she asks, sounding a tad alarmed. "My goodness, why?"

Oh, never mind.

But she continues: "Sex, incest, abortion and rape, that's what's on daytime television. Our show will be just lovely."

Howers and Mobley will, in the charming jargon of the press release, "interact" with the couple to be married, along with their invited guests.

"Oh, it will be great fun," Mobley says. "As soon as they told me about it, I knew it would be a hit."

The only religious ceremony that can't be used is Mormon, that church, says Mobley, does not allow a couple to be married on TV in front of several million nosy strangers. All this is a lot to be crammed into 30 minutes. And what about this bachelor party business? I've been a bachelor. I wouldn't stop at an X-rated drive-in.

"It will be very restrained, of course," Mobley vows. "Nothing naughty."

To make it even more attractive for people who don't mind performing like seals, all expenses will be paid by the show's producers.

And each couple will get a big freebie — "Anything," says Mobley, "from an all-expenses-paid honeymoon to a wonderful collection of pots and pans."
